Dollar Plan Of Roosevelt Is Challenged By Institute

Brookings Disputes That Gold Deals Bring Higher Prices.

Finds Uncertainty Over Money Is Hampering Recovery.

(Associated Press.)

The Brookings Institution yesterday arrayed itself in opposition to the Roosevelt monetary program and challenged the "scientific validity" of its basic theory—that commodity prices will move upward automatically when the price of gold is increased.

After analyzing the various new Administration factors influencing prices, it comes to two conclusions:

"The first is that no definite, predictable rise in the commodity price level can be assumed to follow a given depreciation of the currency. Such rise as occurs is not general or horizontal in character, representing an automatic adjustment of all commodity prices to alterations in the price of gold.

"The second conclusion is that once a desired price level has been obtained, by whatever means, no evidence exists that henceforth that level can be automatically controlled by altering the price of gold."

Economics Its Field.

The Brookings Institution is an endowed organization devoted to "economic research and the interpretation of current economic problems."

The gold analysis, entitled "Current Monetary Issues," was prepared by Leo Pasvolsky, author of various financial studies. He was assisted by a committee consisting of Dr. Harold G. Moulton, president of the institution; Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, director of its institute of economics, and Dr. Charles O. Hardy and Miss Cleona Lewis, of the institution's staff.

The Roosevelt gold purchase plan has consisted of the establishment of an arbitrarily determined price at which the Government buys unlimited quantities of domestic newly mined gold, and gold purchased abroad. Between October 21 and December 1, the domestic quotation was increased from $31.68 to $34.01 where it has remained since. Gold purchases in foreign markets, negligible until 10 days ago, have since been increased to the extent of some 30 or 35 million dollars.

Scheme Outlined.

Outlining the purposes of this scheme, the Brookings critique said:

"The new plan is expected to operate upon the principle of regulat-

Bolivia Ready To Seek Peace

President Tells Uruguay That Nation Wants to End Strife.

Montevideo, Dec. 17 (AP).—President Salamanca of Bolivia telegraphed President Terra of Uruguay tonight that Bolivia was "disposed to listen to terms of immediate solution" of the Chaco war with Paraguay.

The message was in reply to one sent by President Terra at midday to the presidents of both Bolivia and Paraguay, saying that a specific proposal for peace was being worked out. A reply was expected tomorrow from Paraguay.

Non-members of the League of Nations were seen today as a stumbling block confronting a resolution of the peace committee of the Pan-American Conference offering to cooperate with the league in seeking peace in the Chaco war.

The reluctance of nonmember countries to approve the peace committee's resolution led to an attempt to redraft the proposal so it would not embarrass the United States and Brazil.

The League of Nations' Chaco commission, now engaged in direct investigation of the Chaco War, was reported en route to Montevideo from La Paz, Bolivia.

Reich Jails Rabbi; Slight Is Claimed

Compared Police Chief With King Herod.

Offenbach, Germany, Dec. 17 (AP). Police took a Rabbi, named Dienemann, into protective custody today for comparing the local chief of police to King Herod, ruler of Palestine, who ruthlessly suppressed his supposed enemies. The comparison was drawn in a lecture before a Jewish congregation.

The Rabbi also was said to have intimated that the administration was marked by violences similar to those occuring during French occupation of the Ruhr, following the World War.

Relief Outlay Perils Credit, League Holds

Economy Body's Petition to Roosevelt Urges Expense Cuts.

New York, Dec. 17 (Spl.).—The National Economy League, a nonpolitical and nonpartisan organization, declaring that the rapidly mounting National debt constitutes a grave threat to the credit of the Federal Government, today placed before President Roosevelt and Congress a petition urging a true balancing of the budget at the earliest practicable date.

The petition states that it "is not to be taken as expressing either approval or disapproval of the program or policies of the present Administration. It is directed to one point alone—that the cost of the program is becoming so vast that unless expenditure is checked the National credit will be endangered."

It is added that "we are not unmindful of the moral right and duty of the Federal Government to step in where State and local governments are unable to protect victims of the depression from actual hardship. In making expenditures for relief, the Government must do its part in such circumstances. At the same time, the marked tendency of State and local communities to 'lie down' on the Government must be resisted."

Approaches War Peak.

The National debt, it is pointed out, on November 30 was $23,534,116,000, according to an announcement by the Treasury Department, or only $3,080,151,000 below the World War peak. To this it is estimated that during the remainder of the current fiscal year another $3,000,000,000 will be added, and still another enormous increase during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, is threatened.

On December 31, 1930, the National debt was $16,026,086,000, the low point since the war peak. The increase to June 30, 1933, was $6,512,586,000, or more than 40 per cent. From June 30, 1932, to June 30, 1933, the debt jumped $3,051,663,000, or an average of $250,000,000 a month.

Under these circumstances, the petition states, it is not surprising

Sanders to Keep Helm Of G. O. P., Says Fess

Senator Fess, of Ohio, member of the National Republican committee and former National chairman, last night said that Everett Sanders would continue to head the National party organization, according to the Associated Press.

"Sanders," Fess told reporters, in discussing reports that a move was afoot to displace the former Coolidge secretary from the National chairmanship, "is not going to resign and that is absolutely certain."

NRA Adopts New Buyers' Council Plan

Representation Will Be Given Through New Set-Up.

Gen. Johnson Studies Revision of All Authorities.

By Felix Bruner.

Consumer interests will be represented in every county in the United States by local units of the National Emergency Council being set up by exceutive order, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, NRA administrator, said yesterday.

Further clarifying the emergency council set-up, Gen. Johnson added, that not only will these organizations represent consumer interests, but they will take over functions of 30 or more other local recovery organizations.

Gen. Johnson further revealed he is seriously considering a plan for revision of all code authorities to include on each one a Government representative and two assistants or advisers, one appointed by the NRA Labor Advisory Board and the other by the NRA Consumers Advisory Board.

Seeks Roosevelt's Approval.

The plan, Gen. Johnson pointed out, must have the approval of the President. He said disclosure of his plan has not brought any direct attacks from labor, which has been insisting on direct representation.

Gen. Johnson has for the first time named a labor representative as an administrator. He is George L. Berry, president of the International Pressmen's Union, who will relieve C. C. Williams, as head of the NRA divisions.

Williams is withdrawing because of illness in his family. Berry is a member of the Labor Advisory Board and of the National Labor Board.

Announcement that the Emergency Council organizations will function as consumer boards runs contrary to a statement last week by the consumers advisory board that consumers councils would be set up in each county.

Dr. Paul H. Douglas of the advisory board, said in making the announcement that plans already were under way for setting up such bodies.

Plan Would Group Leaders.

Each of these councils was to include in its membership a member of a women's organization interested in consumer problems, a county agricultural agent, a "dirt farmer," a housewife of "moderate or less than moderate" means, a manual worker and a member of a consumers cooperative organization.

The President's announcement of formation of the National Emergency Council said State directors would be appointed and local organizations would be formed. The principal function of the council, was indicated at that time, would be to work as a central information bureau.

"The council," the announcement said, "will set up in Washington a central information bureau for the purpose of conveying to the general public all factual information with reference to the various Governmental agencies. It will set up similar bureaus throughout the various counties in the United States.

To Settle Controversies.

"It will also provide machinery, temporary in character, for the adjustment of such controversies as may arise from the operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Agricultural Adjustment Act."

It is under this last provision that the newly formed councils will function as consumers councils in place of the separate organizations planned by the advisory board.

Gen. Johnson expressed the opinion that the recovery program has reached the stage where activities looking to the protection of the consumer are becoming increasingly important.

"Of course," he added, "this whole

Mencken Leaves His Beer to Chase 2 Noisy Pacifists

HENRY MENCKEN.

Baltimore, Dec. 17 (AP).—H. L. Mencken, Baltimore's fiery man of letters; Alfred Knopf, New York publisher; an eminent surgeon, an authority on genetics and a well-known musician today appeared in police court here to tell how last night they defeated and captured a couple of pacifists who started a fight.

It happened at Schellhases' restaurant, where the Saturday Night Club had assembled in a back room to drink beer and discuss Bach. The club is composed of outstanding men in various fields. Knopf was there as Mencken's guest.

While the club consumed beer and Bach, two young men, J. R. Coe, of Washington, and Thomas C. Pinkerton, of Baltimore, were at a table in front. While they downed a goodly number of drinks, according to the proprietor, they poured

Johnson Gives '34 Extension On Auto Code

Industry Would Allow Authority to Run to September 1.

Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson yesterday announced that the automobile industry has requested an extension of its code to September 1, 1934, and that it would be granted without change.

Like the steel code, which was extended last month at request of the industry, the automobile code was promulgated for a trial period only. That period ends December 31 and request for its renewal was expected.

Answering the questions of newspapermen, Gen. Johnson said nothing would be done to alter the so-called "merit" clause in the code, which has been the target of labor criticism. The clause gives employers the right to hire and fire in accordance with merit.

Union Points Settled.

The administrator said he believed objections raised by union labor had been answered by the President's statement interpreting the clause. The Chief Executive issued a statement explaining that the right existed but was not to be used to discriminate against union members.

Both extension of the automobile code, requested by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, and the steel code, which was accompanied by praise from steel manufacturers, have been considered by the NRA as evidence of the worth of the code system.

Industry Optimistic.

Detroit, Dec. 17 (AP).—The extension until September 1, 1934, of the NRA automotive code, announced at Washington tonight, comes on the eve of one of the industry's most concerted sales drives when optimism is apparent in all quarters.

During the months in which the code was in its trial phase encouraging reports of sales, production and employment have been issued by manufacturers, indicating that 1933 has marked a definite upswing in the industry.

Continuation of the code with its prescribed limitations on hours of work, coupled with an anticipated improvement in business during 1934, is seen in some automotive circles as insuring continued employment for thousands of workers.

Monte Carlo Wants To Sue Mississippi

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—The principality of Monaco announced through its consulate general today that it would seek leave tomorrow to sue the State of Mississippi.

The action involves State bonds, held by the principality, which have been in default more than 90 years.

Application for leave to sue Mississippi is to be made in the United States Supreme Court.

RFC Moves To Legalize Wage Loans

Seeks to Loosen Credit in Place of NRA Operations.

(Associated Press.)

Direct loans to industry through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for meeting pay rolls and increasing employment were understood yesterday to be under serious consideration by the Administration.

Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the corporation, and other members of its board of directors are studying the proposal on instructions from President Roosevelt. They have not yet reported on how such loans may be legalized.

The effort is being directed, it was learned on highest authority, to find some means of loosening credit in the place of the NRA loan plan announced at the White House last September. The NRA plan was designed to supply money to code subscribers but, despite the fact that more than 15,000 applications have been received, only a comparatively small sum has been lent.

Bankers Slow to Act.

Jones has indicated frequently at press conferences and in addresses that the Administration is not satisfied with the way bankers are meeting the credit situation. He asserted recently, however, that he felt the situation was improving and added that bankers who held back through fear of inflation were, in his opinion, not justified.

In an effort to supply cash for normal business loans, the corporation has been conducting a drive to get banks and trust companies to sell the Government preferred stock and capital notes. These securities can be redeemed at any time, but, while the corporation owns the stock or notes, it has voting power, dollar for dollar, equal to the same amount of common capital stock of the bank, in quite a number of instances holding actual voting control.

More than 2,000 banks have sold their preferred stock or capital notes to the corporation.

In commenting on the preferred stock purchasing plan, Jones said recently the corporation was trying to put money into banks so they would have it available for loans as business picked up.

Hands Off on Operation.

Asked if the corporation seeks to interfere in operation of banks, Jones said it does not, but that it votes its stock every time there is a stockholders' meeting.

The reason given by some for slowness of the NRA loan plan is that loans can not be made direct to individuals. To meet this restriction, mortgage loan companies were formed and an intensive effort made to bring a large number of borrowers together in a mortgage company.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States has been acting as liaison agent in an effort to get borrowers of the same classes together to form loan companies. This work, however, it was indicated at the corporation yesterday has not been as successful as hoped.

Whatever new plan is worked out, Jones indicated, will be aimed at helping the "little fellow." The Administration feels that big concerns are well financed and their reserves will carry them through.

Free Gold Market Seen in U. S. Step

London Eyes Move to Lift World Price Level.

London, Dec. 17 (AP).—Reports from Washington that American financial experts are considering further methods of raising the world price of gold aroused interested speculation in London today as to whether the United States might establish a free gold market.

Reports the United States might buy gold both abroad and at home in order to equalize domestic and foreign prices for the metal led to the speculation.

Although there was no indication from Washington that the Government or its experts contemplated establishing a "free gold market," in which supply and demand fixes the price, it was indicated the Government might take further steps for the purchase both of domestic and foreign gold.

Troops Wearing Civil Clothes Accused of Aiding Assault.

Havana, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—A mob sacked and set fire to the newspaper El Pais here today, as violence broke out in many sections of Havana.

Six dead and 12 wounded were listed in the casualties at Emergency Hospital. The dead included a linotype operator named Daussa, a newsboy and one unidentified mulatto. The wounded included two passersby and one printer.

The fighting at El Pais began at 4:15 p. m. Hundreds of shots were fired.

Pedestrians fled to cover, and the streets were almost instantly cleared.

Soldiers Shoot at Snipers.

Assistant Chief of Police Salvador Diaz declared shooting broke out in many sections of the city almost simultaneously. He said police "don't know who is doing the shooting or who started the fire."

The El Pais building burned fiercely and efforts to save the plant were futile. Police and soldiers continued shooting at snipers on nearby roofs.

The building was attacked, looted and set afire by crowds of government sympathizers. The newspaper had been consistently against the government of President Ramon Grau San Martin, and was the only one to give retiring U. S. Ambassador Sumner Welles a cordial send-off when he left recently for the United States.

Typewriters Stolen.

The crowds rushed into the streets after the paper was looted, carrytypewriters, furniture, &c. The sacking was practically a repetition of the destruction of the Heraldo de Cuba last August.

The fire for a time threatened to spread, endangering the entire block in which El Pais was located.

Armando Villalon, radio operator now in hiding, was reached by telephone this evening. He described the sacking of El Pais as follows:

"Shortly after 4 p. m., a crowd appeared outside El Pais and started shooting into the building. Some of the paper's staff said they

Priest Killed In Car Crash; Aid Injured

Father Cavanaugh, Pastor of Assumption Church, Dies in Hospital.

The Rev. Francis X. Cavanaugh, pastor of the Church of the Assumption, died early this morning in Casualty Hospital, a few hours after he was dragged unconscious from his wrecked automobile at Eleventh and I streets southeast.

Father Cavanaugh's car was struck broadside by another machine and hurled against a truck parked at the curb. His assistant, the Rev. George T. Bolling, also injured in the crash, was reported in a critical condition.

Accidents Kill 2 Others.

Two other persons were killed and several injured in and near Washington yesterday as motorists floundered through fog.

Father Cavanaugh was driving his own car. Police described the crash as one of the worst in traffic annals.

George R. Allison, colored, 19, of 3304 I street southeast, said by police to have been the driver of the other machine, was also seriously injured. The machine he was driving, police said, had been stolen from in front of 1333 T street southeast.

Father Cavanaugh had been prominently identified with Catholic lay organizations. He was chaplain of the Catholic Daughters of America, Keane Council, K. of C., and the Curley Club.

Educated At Gonzaga.

He was born in 1892 in New York City, and was educated at Gonzaga High School, St. Charles College, St. Mary's University and Catholic University. He was ordained in 1915 and served as curate at St. Martin's Church for 13 years before assuming the pastorate of the Church of the Assumption in November, 1931.

Father Bolling was ordained last June in Baltimore. He is a native of that city and was educated for the priesthood at St. Mary's Seminary.

An unidentified colored man was killed near Four Mile Run, Va., when he stepped into the path of a southbound bus.

Vance Death Facts Bring Police Probe

Accident Verdict Refused; Benzine Found at Fire Scene.

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Police tonight plunged into an investigation of the death of Louis Joseph Vance, author, whose half-clad body was found yesterday in his fire-damaged apartment.

Dr. Milton Helpern, assistant medical examiner, announced after an autopsy that he would not certify the death as accidental until after a chemical analysis of Vance's vital organs.

Dr. Helpern also said the finding of a partially empty 8-ounce benzine can in the apartment and the extent of the burns on Vance's body made the case suspicious.

Liked to Smoke in Bed.

Vance once told friends it was his ambition to be so rich "that I may lie in bed and smoke forever." Beside his armchair were found numerous cigarette stubs. Police at first believed Vance had fallen asleep with a lighted cigarette.

Vance, 54, was a successful writer of mystery stories whose plots presented no more intriguing a situation than that which police said confronted them in his death.

Family Scouts Mystery.

Members of Vance's family and friends, however, did not share the police hints of mystery.

Howard Kyle, actor, and Vance's brother-in-law, said he saw nothing mysterious in the finding of the benzine can.

A report filed by an assistant medical examiner, Dr. Robert C. Fisher, based on a statement from Dr. R. I. Kreisberg, Vance's physician, stated the author had been drinking heavily before his death.

Close friends of Vance, however, said he never touched alcohol.

Vance's body was found disrobed to the waist, as though he had prepared for bed. Flames had virtually consumed the chair in which he was found.

Three Vessels Call for Help

Cutters Speed to Rescue of Vessel Battered by Storms.

Portland, Oreg., Dec. 17 (U.P.). Hurricane winds and a mountainous sea caused two vessels off Pacific shores to send SOS calls today and drove another aground in the Columbia River.

The lumber freighter Henry D. Whiton, 4,548-ton vessel owned by the Union Sulphur Co., Inc., and carrying a crew of 35 men, was out of control off Yaquina Head, Oreg., the Coast Guard reported.

Capt. J. Sandberg ordered the deck cargo of lumber jettisoned tonight after battling winds that reached a velocity of 75 miles an hour.

A plea for aid was radioed by Capt. Sandberg to the battleships Colorado and Marblehead at 8:50 p. m. and the vessels were reported in the vicinity.

The Lio, General Petroleum tanker, was 25 miles from the Whiton and had the wind behind it as it drove through towering waves to aid the vessel.

An S O S also was received from a small Japanese tramp ship, the Yuhi, plying between Japan and Hawaii.

Now Lanham Plans to Fool Starlings With Shotgun Duds

The Battle of the Bird is soon to begin in dead earnest with the introduction of heavy artillery. Clifford Lanham, District superintendent of trees and parking, and chairman of the starling nuisance abatement committee, is going to ask the District Commissioners for permission to use shotguns, as the latest move to drive out the pests.

"Every bird knows what a gun is," he explained yesterday. "So I'm going to suggest that we fire shotguns loaded only with black powder into the trees or at buildings where the starlings are. We'd do it after midnight and I don't think it would disturb the slumbers of [illegible] any more than the backfire of an automobile."

[illegible] morning when Mr. Lanham with his committee in his office at the District Building, he [illegible] to press the suggestion. It [illegible]ked in Wilmington, Del., and [illegible]yette, Ind., he said.

"[illegible]d organize a sort of flying [illegible]on," Lanham said. "Keep them on the run, you know. It sort of breaks the monotony. Lots of people have called my office about those starlings. I told them, 'just clap your hands. They will go away. Do it again if they come back.'"

But this method, apparently hasn't been so successful. The starlings are reported to be making inroads on the District Library Building at Eighth and K streets, where they have found a haven on the stately facades and in the poplars surrounding the library grounds. It was the activity of Lanham's committee during the midtown campaign two weeks ago which started the birds in the direction of the library.

The Audubon Society has told Lanham that starlings are not protected.

As chairman of the tree and parking committee, Lanham has been quite busy in planting new trees.

"But as soon as we plant new trees, the starlings roost in them right away," he confessed. "The bird is all right. It's just its roosting habits," he sighed.

Adolph's Lost Dog Is Found, Ending State-Wide Search

Jersey City, N. J., Dec. 17 (AP).—The happiest boy and probably the happiest pup in town tonight were 11-year-old Adolph Gioia, jr., and his dog Rex, together again after a week of separation.

Rex, object of a State-wide police search by order of Gov. A. Harry Moore, was found today.

The 10-month-old chow and police dog disappeared December 9 when Adolph took him to visit his aunt, Mrs. Mary Conti, at Lincoln. Six days later Adolph, desperate, wrote to the governor.

State police were ordered to find a brown dog answering to the name of Rex. They found half a dozen, but not the right one. The missing Rex got a lot of publicity, and today when Mrs. Ruth O'Donnell, of Dunellen, a few miles from Lincoln, saw a brown dog she took it and checked its license number. It was Adolph's Rex.

The police took Rex to Jersey City. Adolph was called to the Seventh Precinct Station. Rex wagged his tail, Adolph embraced him, thanked the officers, and then sat down and wrote the governor:

"I just got my pal Rex back and I want to thank you because you found him. It's the best Christmas present I'll ever get and I'll never forget what you did. Thanks again."

Blanket Code Held on Verge Of Extension

White House Expected to Ask Further NRA Compliance.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Faced with early expiration of the President's reemployment agreement, by which industry was swept under a blanket contract pending formulation of individual codes, President Roosevelt is believed almost ready to announce continuation of the Blue Eagle of the National Recovery Administration.

This could not be done by simple Executive order, extending the period of the agreement, but informed quarters last night thought its purpose might be accomplished by Presidential announcement that the Blue Eagle would continue to be the authorized symbol of compliance with minimum requirements.

Already from 75 to 80 per cent of labor and the great bulk of major industries are under codes, but what to do about the remainder of business still awaiting agreements constitutes a problem for recovery officials, since the P. R. A. comes to an official end at the close of the year.

250 Codes Nearly Ready.

Effective September 1, the P. R. A., has set wage and hour standards subscribed to by hundreds of thousands of employers while the process of code-making sped ahead. Up to this week 160 codes have been promulgated, 250 are almost ready, but more than 200 others have not been heard.

Continuance of the contract itself would only be possible by agreement of both parties—the employer as well as the President—and there appeared little likelihood another campaign for signatures would be undertaken. Hence, it was thought a presidential appeal for further compliance, signalized by use of the Blue Eagle, would be made to continue the program without change.

Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson has been considering the question, it is understood, but as yet no announcement has come from NRA headquarters indicating what would be done. In fact, the problem was minimized to an extent by the fact that only minor, highly specialized industries employing little labor will be outside code regulation by December 31.

Insignia May Be Dropped.

Every day carries the NRA farther from the Blue Eagle stage of the program and eventually the use of insignia is expected to be abandoned. But the codification of industry is still in a formative stage and numerous changes—such as the inclusion of related businesses under master codes, a definite policy on price-fixing, standardization of code authorities—still lie ahead.

Gen. Johnson settled one problem brought on by the end of the year with approval yesterday of modification of hour provisions of the P.R.A. to permit necessary overtime work in connection with year-end inventories. This will permit employers under the agreement to work employes during the next two weeks as long as may be necessary, provided the workers are paid time and one-half for overtime.

The administrator acted on recommendation of the National Compliance Board, which pointed out that provisions for inventory periods in most permanent codes were not included in the original President's reemployment agreement. Unless such an exception was made, the board advised, many employers would be subjected to unnecessary inconvenience.

Inventories Limited.

The concession is allowed only "for the purpose of taking a calendar year-end inventory," the NRA made clear. It applies also to any approved substitution for the P. R. A.

Meanwhile, the three food industry codes—covering retail, wholesale and manufacturing businesses—are in the hands of Assistant Administrator Arthur D. Whiteside for minor changes, it was learned. Previously it had been said they would be ready for the President's signature last week, but Gen. Johnson has asked further study of the provisions.

This does not mean, however, that the NRA still is debating provisions of the codes eliminated when they were transferred from the A. A. A. by President Roosevelt. Those provisions, favored by the A. A. A. "young Liberals," are definitely out, and when the codes are sent to the White House in the next few days they will conform more nearly to usual NRA specifications.

Powerful Spectacles Devised for Bad Eyes

Baltimore, Dec. 17 (Spl.).—Powerful microscopic spectacles magnifying 18 times for partially blind persons were announced here today before the twelfth annual meeting of the American Academy of Optometry.

Dr. William Feinbloom, of New York, who last year patented his cylindrical telescopic spectacles, made the presentation of this and four other new devices in a paper read before the academy.

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Education of Catholic children in Catholic schools was urged tonight by former Gov. Alfred E. Smith in his speech of acceptance of a medal from St. Bonaventure's College, Alleghany, N. Y., as the layman who had performed the great "Catholic Action" in the year.

Davila Favors League.

Cleveland, Dec. 17 (AP).—An opinion that international peace can be preserved only by retention of terms of the Treaties of Versailles and Trianon, and by support of the principles of the League of Nations, was voiced tonight by Carol Davila, Roumanian Minister to the United States.

Hurt by Fall

J. F. M. Bowie Critically Hurt Tending Pets

Realty Official, Gridiron Club Member, Falls on Stairs at Home.

Fondness for his dogs has led to the critical injury of J. F. M. Bowie, vice president of the H. L. Rust Co., and one of the most active members of the Gridiron Club.

Last night he was unconscious at Emergency Hospital with a fractured skull, though attending physicians said his condition appeared more encouraging than it had early yesterday.

Bowie's injury occured late Saturday night when he fell down the cellar steps at his home 2916 Thirty-second street northwest, and struck his head against a steel post.

As was his custom just before retiring, he had gone to the basement to see that his dogs were comfortable. He had spent the evening at his home with Mrs. Bowie.

Mrs. Bowie, who found her husband after the accident, advanced the theory that he had stumbled over one of the dogs on the steps landing or that one of the dogs had run up the stairs and tripped him.

Dr. William Berry Marbury, family physician, was summoned and Bowie was removed to the hospital. Dr. John Shugrue, brain specialist, was called. After a conference yesterday, the physicians said that Bowie was reacting favorably to treatment though his condition still was critical.

Bowie, long prominent in realty circles and a former president of the Washington Real Estate Board, probably is even better known for his ability as a nonprofessional singer and as a star entertainer at Gridiron Club dinners.

He has been associated with H. L. Rust Co. for 32 years, starting in a modest position in the rent department and working his way up to the vice presidency. Besides being president of the Real Estate Board in 1931 he served in various other official capacities as director and chairman of important committees of the board.

Deflation Tide Turned in '33, Roper Reports

Secretary of Commerce Says First 3 Months Brought Change.

(Associated Press.)

The tide of deflation was reported yesterday by Secretary Roper of the Commerce Department to have been definitely stemmed in the second three months of this year.

In his annual report covering the fiscal year ended June 30, Secretary Roper said:

"In the United States signs of resistance to further contraction appeared in the first half of the fiscal year and by the final quarter the tide of deflation was definitely stemmed.

"Confidence was greatly strengthened as a result of the decisive governmental action, business activity quickened, and by the end of the fiscal year substantial progress had been made."

Few Recommendations.

The report contained few recommendations for new legislation.

As for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the report said:

"The policy and functions of the bureau are in process of revaluation, to the end that its activities shall represent the highest form of service to the business community and to the other branches of the Government.

"That it will play an important part in the economic developments of the next year can not be questioned. It must provide a factual basis for the wise determination of economic policy looking toward the return of stability and security to our economic system."

The Census Bureau recommended that a complete census of manufacturers be taken every five years and a limited census every year, with certain quarterly and monthly statistics.

Urges Full Census in 1935.

The bureau further urged that a census of population be taken in 1935 along with the censsu of agriculture. The American Statistical Association, the American Sociological Society and the Census Advisory Committee have recommended such action.

The Patent Office reported its work was impeded by vacancies and urged that it would be advisable "to fill some of the existing vacancies in the force so that the patent work may be brought within the desired 60-day period before the expected revival of business again floods the office with new work."

The office recommended a reclassification of patents which probably would result in a saving of $174,000 and increase the efficiency of examiners not less than 10 per cent.

The Bureau of Mines urged that the Government provide a laboratory on the campus of the University of Maryland.

Roper commented briefly on the business advisory and planning council set up by him in June, pointing to the long-range studies being undertaken by the committee and anticipating "invaluable constructive assistance from the study, research and recommendations of this volunteer group of public-spirited industrialists."

Games Blamed For High Army Accident Rate

Medical Chief Urges Ban; Mishaps Take Larger Toll Than Disease.

Although the Army's health during the past year was "very satisfactory," the Surgeon General, Maj. Gen. Robert U. Patterson, declared unnecessary roughness in athletic games had become too important as a cause of hospitalization.

Declaring rough play was widespread in games of both officers and enlisted men, Gen. Patterson, in his annual report to the Secretary of War, released yesterday, said that it should be eliminated.

The surgeon general blamed injuries from external causes as a source of hospitalization. "During the year," he wrote, "the rate for diseases alone was 526 per thousand and for external injuries, 125."

Accidents Take Heavy Toll.

"For the first time on record, the deaths among officers and men from accidents, 284, exceeded the deaths from disease, 279," he said. Total deaths were 567, as compared with 626 in 1931.

During the last 100 years, the report stated, the sick rate has been reduced 76 per cent and the death rate, 88 per cent.

There were 19 fewer deaths from automobiles during the year than there were in 1931, 7 less from pneumonia, 5 less from airplanes and 19 less from tuberculosis, but there were 20 more suicides and 16 more homicides.

Mental Disease Common.

During the year, 69 officers and 1,497 enlisted men were discharged for physical or mental unfitness. As for several years past, Maj. Gen. Patterson declared, nervous and mental diseases lead all others as causes for discharge.

Army death rates from automobiles are excessive, the surgeon general declared. Auto accidents head the list of causes of death.

He revealed 1,471,147 days were lost because of sickness during the year, or that each day 4,000 soldiers were absent from duty because of illness.

Man Builds a Tiny Furnace Whose Heat Exceeds the Sun's

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 17 (AP).—A new kind of electrical furnace which produces hot spots of hundreds of thousands of degrees, tremendously exceeding anything known on the surface of the sun, was announced tonight at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

This furnace is a small, glass vacuum tube, and the hot spots within it provide a new source of protons, or heavy particles of electricity, for bombarding the nuclei of atoms. They yield ninefold more protons than any method previously devised.

The heating element of the tube is three electrodes. Its fuel for making protons is hydrogen gas, at low pressure. Between two of the electrodes a flaming arc forms in the gas. There is, however, nothing extraordinary about this arc, which resembles any ordinary flame of this kind.

But placed around the arc is the third electrode and its boosting action produces the hot points in the gas. The excesive temperatures are confined to these points, the gas around them remaining comparatively cool. The points of heat are too small to be read with ordinary instruments. But their existence and temperatures are revealed by the streams of protons shooting out from them.

Just how this is done was discovered by Dr. Edward S. Lamar and Dr. Overton Luhr, working with cooperation of Dr. Karl T. Compton, president of the institute. The arc tears apart some of the hydrogen gas particles, turning them into ionized, or electrified, bodies.

Previous furnaces of this sort have used only the single arc. This has yielded mostly electrically charged molecules, or pairs of atoms. Dr. Compton, in describing the advantages of obtaining protons instead of these molecular ions, said that protons in a 1,000,000-volt bombarding current will produce the same results as 2,000,000 volts with ordinary molecular ions.

Beer Will Get "Breaks" Over Liquor Here

Commissioners Propose Easier Laws to Control Beverage Sale.

Beer is to be king so far as prerogatives and preference go under the law the District Commissioners will recommend to Congress as a substitute for the Volstead, Sheppard and other antiliquor laws which authorities continue to enforce in the National Capital despite repeal of the prohibition amendment.

Commissioner George E. Allen has insisted the Commissioners will recommend and fight for a "liberal" liquor law with license fees and municipal taxes sufficiently low to permit the licensed dispenser of liquor to compete with the bootlegger on a profitable basis. Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Maj. John C. Gotwals, Engineer Commissioner, have declared for the same program.

Special privileges, however, are to be accorded to dispensers and purchasers of beer. These will include lower taxes and license fees, greater latitude in interpretation of the restrictive provisions governing granting of licenses, special privileges about advertising not only beer but particular brands, and other provisions designed to advance the sale and drinking of beer in contrast to stronger alcoholic beverages.

William W. Bride, corporation counsel, said beer should be made readily available to those who wish it, although he believes in close regulation sales of stronger drinks. Mr. Bride has been restive under criticism of the restrictive provisions of the measure which he, with Vernon E. West, his assistant, submitted to the Commissioners for consideration at the recent public hearing. Mr. Bride said he would prefer to leave details of regulation to the Commissioners, but he added that fundamentals of the liquor control bill should make beer more prevalent than stronger drinks.

Draft of the bill is expected to be completed this week. When it has been rewritten, the Commissioners will decide what they will recommend for taxes and license fees. Under their program many places will take out licenses for the sale of beer to be consumed with sandwiches and other foods, places which would not find it profitable to pay the heavier license levy for stronger drinks.

The Commissioners propose to bind themselves by the decision of owners of 51 per cent of the real estate in the vicinity of the place in which it is proposed to sell liquor. A more liberal provision will govern beer, it is said.

Many Benefits Of Homesteads Told in Speech

C. E. Pickett of PWA Says Communal Farming Is Boon to Many.

Subsistence homesteads—the new frontier for unemployed workers—were described last night by Clarence E. Pickett, assistant in the subsistence homesteads division of the Public Works Administration, at a gathering in the Friends Meeting House, 1811 I street northwest.

The project has a two-fold aim: to prevent a lower economic standard of living among the unemployed, and to help solve the problem of industrial unemployment by bringing people back to the land.

Financed by the Government, a community of 125 miners' families is now in operation in West Virginia. Each family has a weekly income of $16 and the men build their own home. Expenses of maintaining the experiment will be paid back to the Government over a period of 20 years.

Pickett stressed the value of hand-made articles, carving, weaving and carpentering which the community life allows, also relief from the centralization of industries and congestion of factory workers.

The homesteaders were picked for their farming abilities, character and general intelligence. They do not live a rich life, but their surroundings provide a social interest and economic support that is lacking among many hopeless and despondent persons who have no chance for work in the overindustrialized civilization, Pickett said.

Purest of Breed, Holders of Production Records Among 187 Cows.

By Robert F. Whitney.

"It's a bull's world."

With a look of resignation in her great big brown eyes, Mary Alexander Barksdale III mooed that statement.

I looked at Mary, fine upstanding cow that she was, and said:

"What, not contented! It seems to me that if ever a lady should be contented it should be you.

White Feet 'n' All.

"Why, every one of your feet is white and there isn't a black hair in the switch of your tail (Editor's note—To be admitted to the inner circles of the Holstein register, the calf applicant must have four white feet and a white switch.)

"Here you live with 187 of your peers, 85 of them cows which can boast of milk and butter records. Eleven men wait upon you, feed you, wash and manicure you and milk you with the best of machines.

"Your herd was the first in the country to be accredited as free from tuberculosis and other disease. You, yourself, are the best producer in the herd—21,234 pounds of milk a year your record.

In Sight of Capitol.

"From the 175-acre farm on which your food is grown you can see the Capitol of the United States and other features of one of the great cities of the world.

"School children come to look at you, the 1,500 inmates of the home consume the 300 gallons of milk the herd produces every day. In fact, you are as pampered as a queen. A princess you are, in fact.

"Listen, Mary Alex Barksdale, 3d, you should be proud as well as contented."

There was that same far away look in the cow's eyes when she replied:

"You don't understand. This making records is more work than fun and there's always the strain of competition. I would like a chance to live my own life.

Bulls Have It Easy.

"Now, there are Pabst's Cascade Prilly Prince, or Winterthur Posch Great Monarch or General Winterthur Ormsby—the head bulls around this farm.

"You don't find them getting up at 4:30 o'clock in the morning to be milked. No, they just lead the life of Riley, lying around in a box stall, with no worrying about records.

"And it is the same for the other bulls around here. They even get a chance to travel. Some of them are sold to farmers who wish to improve the quality of their herd. The bulls get a chance to see the country.

"And one thing more. You would think that a lady would be entitled to a little jewelry, a few gewgaws. Well, every time I look at that pretty ring in Winterthur's nose, I. . . . Well, it's a bull's world."

New Spanish Cabinet Meets

Premier Lerroux Pleased With Variety; Barrios New Vice President.

Madrid, Dec. 17 (AP).—The new cabinet formed by Premier Alejandro Lerroux—one with the conservatives dominant—met informally today.

Lerroux said the only developments were that Diego Martinez Barrios, whom he succeeded as premier, was named vice president of the cabinet, and Jose Estadella, a radical Republican, secretary. Barrios is minister of war and Estadella is minister of labor.

It was reported in ministerial circles that Barrios would be named minister of interior when Rico Avello finishes his work with the "state of alarm," declared last week after revolts in northeastern Spain had claimed 100 lives.

Lerroux will present the cabinet to President Alcala Zamora tomorrow.

The new premier said he was "pleased" with the cabinet. He has leftist, rightest and centrist party members, he explained, because they are compatible with the complexion of the Parliament.

The official Monday morning newspaper published orders prohibiting its employes from giving any news information to outside news organizations. Foreign news organizations and correspondents are the only ones affected.

Union Similar to Federal Group Sought.

As an outgrowth of the recent meeting of the Federal Council of Churches in America here, an organization of colored churches with similar scope is contemplated by various colored bishops, who participated in the council. Such action will not effect the present relationship of colored churches to the council, according to the organizers.

Bishop Reverdy D. Ransom yesterday appointed the following temporary committee to contact all denominations: Bishops W. A. Fountain, J. A. Gregg, P. A. Wallace, and L. W. Kyle, also John R. Hawkins and E. L. Madison, laymen. Present at the organization meeting were Bishop E. D. W. Jones, Bishop W. J. Walls, Dr. W. H. Thomas, Dr. R. R. Wright, jr., H. T. Medford and J. H. Collins.

Wright, Jeered at First Flight, Is Honored.

Philadelphia, Dec. 17 (AP).—Franklin Institute dedicated its new Hall of Aviation today in the presence of the man who 30 years ago made the first successful power flight in a heavier-than-air machine.

Orville Wright, whose plans for that first flight brought jeers from the people around Kitty Hawk, N. C., heard Amelia Earhart, first woman to fly the Atlantic alone, laud him as a boon to mankind.

Standing beneath her own scarlet monoplane—the one which hurtled her to fame on the ocean flight—Miss Earhart expressed the hope that "We shall never forget the spirit of the conception nor the beauty of flight which Orville Wright and his brother, Wilbur, opened to mankind."

O'Duffy Seized In Irish Clash

Party Leader Arrested After Fleeing Once From Police.

Westport, Irish Free State, Dec. 17 (AP).—Blue-shirted Gen. Eoin O'Duffy, United Ireland party leader, was arrested today after a clash between Blue Shirts and police in a new climax to Ireland's political warfare.

O'Duffy was arrested once, rescued by his followers, and then rearrested after a hasty flight across a field while his followers fought with those who sought to jail him.

Motoring toward Westport to attend a United Ireland party meeting, the general was stopped by police and told he could go no farther.

He climbed a fence and escaped across the fields and was met by an escort of 100 horsemen who galloped up. Helmeted soldiers bearing rifles, gas masks and tear bombs patrolled the streets in motor lorries.

Police again met O'Duffy, advising him he could not speak, but his supporters lifted him on their shoulders and carried him to a platform, where he spoke briefly before soldiers and police fought their way through.

Protesting, the general was borne to police barracks, which were surrounded by reinforcements when the crowd gathered again.

Almost immediately there was another sharp clash between O'Duffy men and supporters of President Eamon de Valera.

TVA Considering Third Dam Plan

Aurora Site in Kentucky Studied as Project.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has informed private interests seeking control of the Aurora Dam site on the lower Tenessee River that the proposed dam must be part of the entire valley development, it was announced last night. The site is in Kentucky, about 44 miles from Paducah.

"The dam is being studied from an engineering standpoint to determine whether it should be one of the next projects," Chairman Arthur E. Morgan, of the Authority, said, adding:

"The authority does not feel justified in starting another project with its present funds. We have only money enough to finish one job and make a good start on the Wheeler Dam."

Tale of 'Kidnaping' Held Hallucination

Police Doubt Seizure of Express Guard.

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—George Hansen, 34, who told police yesterday he had been "kidnaped" Friday by three men who also took Allen R. Hammel, Brinks Express guard, and $39,000, was charged with disorderly conduct today.

Police said they believed Hansen's story of being taken to Urbana, Ill., by Hammel and the others was an hallucination.

Radio Speaker Explains Relief For Teachers

U. S. to Spend $2,000,000 a Month to Give 40,000 Jobs.

Dr. L. R. Alderman, of the Emergency Relief Administration, in a radio broadcast last night explained the emergency relief plan to employ 40,000 jobless teachers to conduct public classes.

Under the $2,000,000-a-month scheme, classes will be offered adults and children as part of the recovery drive.

Teachers will be employed, Dr. Alderman said, in rural elementary schools where ordinary school funds are exhausted; to instruct adults, for vocational education and general education.

"The most expensive thing in the world is ignorance—ignorance that causes low standards and superstitions and prevents social development," he said. "Aside from the important feature of giving employment to 40,000 needy teachers, is the still more important fact that the program provides instruction to the millions who need it, especially at this time, in order to keep up their courage and faith in themselves."

Volunteers can aid in the program, he said, by helping set up emergency classes and helping with entertainments and social activities.

Farm Taxes Nearly Double 1913 Level

Values Sink Faster Than Imposts, Wallace Told.

Farm real estate taxes still are 89 per cent higher than in 1913, Nils A. Olsen, head of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, told Secretary Wallace in his annual report made public yesterday. In 1929, the taxes were 141 per cent higher than in 1913, the report showed.

Since 1929, when farm taxes began to decline, the ratio of taxes to value increased 26 per cent because the fall was more rapid in land value than in taxes, he said.

"Greater reliance on income taxation as a means of raising revenue to replace a part of the property tax is desirable," Olsen said.

Minister Hits Press as Main Repeal Factor

Dr. Abernathy Says "Big Stick" Used to End Prohibition.

Scoring adoption of the repeal amendment as the "most flagrant and disgraceful use of the big stick that our country has seen in many a day," the Rev. Dr. William S. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, said last night liquor control is a problem for the younger generation.

Dr. Abernethy flayed the "don't care" attitude that characterized enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

"The newspaper," he charged, "the greatest maker of public opinion, decreed the eighteenth amendment must go. Had the newspapers alligned themselves at the beginning in support of the measure, there would have been a different story.

"We have not had an administration since National prohibition became effective that really wanted to see it succeed.

"Had it not been for financially harassed millions willing to grasp at anything that promised a change, Prohibition would still be in effect today," he said.

The minister expressed alarm at liquor sales. The money spent for liquor, he said, can never buy shoes, food and clothing.

"To attempt to control liquor without stamping it out," he said, "is as logical as permitting murder only on week-ends and in designated localities. But now that they are talking of control, let the wets work out the best method without advice or hindrance from the drys.

"The worse the situation becomes the sooner the country will realize the stupendous blunder it has made."

It is a problem the young people of today will have to settle.

Trio Who Helped Wrights Fly Head Kitty Hawk Pilgrimage

Telegrapher Giving News to World Refuses to Make Speech.

Kitty Hawk, N. C., Dec. 17 (AP). Sandy Kill Devil Hill, set apart 30 years from all other sand hills along the Carolina coast when Orville and Wilbur Wright made the first successful airplane flight from it, was visited by hundreds today in commemoration of that epochal event.

There was no formal ceremony. The principal scheduled observance, the dropping of a wreath on the hill by Lieut. Comdr. Frank Hawks while on a speed flight from Washington to Dayton, Ohio, via Kitty Hawk, was called off because of weather conditions.

Although bad weather to the north caused cancellation of Hawks' flight, it was clear here in contrast with that of December 17, 1903, when the Wright brothers took their queer, box-like plane into the air and sailed it victoriously for 120 feet.

On that day the temperature was near freezing and a 25-mile-an-hour wind whipped clouds of sand over the hill and their plane as it took off on a flight now regarded major scientific achievement of the century.

In the gathering at the winged pylon, erected a top the hill by the Federal Government, were four men who played important parts in aiding the Wrights to make their first flight. They were John T. Daniels, Adam Ethridge and John Moore, three survivors of the five men who helped the Wrights launch their plane, and Alpheus W. Drinkwater, Government telegraph operator here, who flashed to the world the news of the successful flight.

Drinkwater, now president of the Kill Devil Hill Memorial Association, headed the assemblage at the hill, but refused to make even a short talk.

"I'm better fitted to send messages over wires than to deliver addresses," he said. Drinkwater sent 42,000 words to the press after the Wrights' flight 30 years ago.

Five Arrested In Oyster War

Virginia Magistrate Sends Them to Grand Jury for "Scraping."

Five men have been held for the grand jury by a King George County magistrate's court for violation of the oyster law on dredging, it was reported yesterday at King George Court House, Va.

Those held are Sydney Pruitt, Bryant Jett and R. S. Miller, of the power boat Maggie Lee; Emanuel Hopkins and Henry Watts, colored, of the Bettie Mae All live at Colonial Beach, Va., and were arrested on the Potomac River at Morgantown, Md.

The arrests were made by Bruce M. Wilmer, deputy sheriff of Charles County, Md., as the result of infringements on the Maryland-Virginia law against "scraping" oysters.

Last Friday approximately 70 armed "scrapers" sailed up the Potomac, "scraped" a quantity of oysters and threatened county police with firearms before being driven away by reinforcements.

Sympathizes with Oystermen.

Baltimore, Dec. 17 (AP).—State Senator Joseph Allan Coad (Dem.), St. Marys, who waged an unsuccessful fight in the recent special session of the legislature to open the Potomac River to handscrapers, last night described the oyster war near Morgantown as "deplorable, but not surprising to me."

"Everywhere I hear oystermen are in dire straits," the St. Marys Countian continued. "This action is what might be expected from people who are in dire straits to make a livelihood.

"Then, too, the Maryland oystermen have to stand by while they see Virginia oystermen violate the law with comparative impunity."

Most fathers will feel a lot more like Santa Claus after they have looked through the Christmas Gift Suggestions under "Holiday Hints" in The Washington Post Classified Columns.

Fog Prevents Wright Honors Aerial Display

Observance of the thirtieth anniversary of man's flight was concluded yesterday afternoon with a simple ceremony at the Wright exhibit in the National Museum.

Other events scheduled for the day, the air show at College Park Airport and the attempt of Frank Hawks to break the world's 2,000-kilometer plane speed record, were canceled because of heavy fog.

First Plane in France.

The wreath was accepted by Dr. Charles G. Abbot, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. The ceremony brought attention to the fact that the Wright brothers' first plane is not at the Smithsonian but is in a French museum.

Among those who attended the rites were Capt. George A. Gray, prominent flyer and student of the Wrights; Mrs. Alys McKey Bryant, secretary of the Washington Unit, W. N. A. A., pioneer woman flyer; and widow of John Milton Bryant, San Francisco flyer; Dr. Paul Edward Garber, of the Smithsonian; Edward H. Young, first man to fly in Washington; former Senator Hiram Bingham, president of the National Aeronautic Association, and Senator and Mrs. Borah.

Many Fliers Present.

Others were Mrs. Phoebe Fairgrave Omlie, special assistant for Air Intelligence; Mrs. Genevieve Moore Savage, Miss Harriett E. Sackett and Miss Helen Cavis, International Aerial Police Women and members of the Washington Unit W. N. A. A.; Mrs. Guy Despard Goff, a member of the local unit who has traveled extensively by air both in this and foreign countries, with her husband, the late Senator Goff; Miss C. Virginia Diedel, counselor for the Washington Unit, W. N. A. A.

Group Capt. G. R. Macfarlane Reid, the air attache for Great Britain; Maj. Norbert Champsaur, military air attache for France; Maj. Gen. George Owen Squier, United States Signal Corps, U. S. A., retired, who recounted many of the thrilling episodes of the early days of the Wright brothers; former Postmaster General Hitchcock, who also recalled many of the difficulties that were met and overcome in the early days of airmail; Mrs. Charles G. Abbott, wife of the secretary of Smithsonian Institution; Mrs. Mary E. Krinbill and Mrs. Hazel E. Tuke, members of the Washington unit, W. N. A. A.

Aviation Lecture Given.

Last night the women's group sponsored a lecture on aviation by Dr. Garber at the Willard Hotel. The lecture is the first of a series of four arranged by the assciation.

It is believed that Frank Hawks will attempt to break the 2,000-kilometer record as soon as the weather is favorable. His route will take him from College Park Airport to Kitty Hawk, thence to Dayton, Ohio, home of Orville Wright, and return to College Park.

2 Women Injured In Auto Collision

One Unconscious, Other Has Broken Leg.

Two women were seriously injured early yesterday in an automobile collison at Wisconsin avenue and Bradley lane, Bethesda, Md.

Miss Minnie Skinner, listed by police as living at 3963 Fessenden street northwest, was still unconscious in Emergency Hospital last night. She was a passenger in the machine of Elmer Baxter, of 9401 Jones Mill road northwest. Baxter was slightly hurt.

Their car collided with that of Ellsworth D. Muller, of Brentwood, Md. Miss Clara Noonan, of 4416 Conduit road northwest, Muller's companion, was treated at Georgetown Hospital for a fractured leg and severe lacerations.

Legal Records Of 1695 First In Book Series

Publication of Old Data Begun by Historical Association.

With publication of proceedings in the Maryland Court of Appeals, 1695 to 1729, the American Historical Association yesterday announced the first of a series of American legal records.

The first volume, inaugurating the series, is edited by Chief Judge Carroll T. Bond, of the Maryland Court of Appeals, in collaboration with Prof. Richard B. Morris, of the College of the City of New York.

In announcing the work, Prof. Evarts B. Greene, of Columbia University, chairman of the association's legal history committee, declared:

"The common interest of jurists and historians in the study of American legal history has long been neglected, but during the past few years there has come a fuller appreciation of what may and should be accomplished through the cooperation of these two groups of scholars.

Sees Much Benefit.

"Even from a practical point of view, there is much to be learned in a study of the processes through which American legal institutions developed out of, and were gradually differentiated from, the English law."

"Unfortunately, the judicial records and collateral material, without which this evolution can not be accurately traced, have for the most part remained inaccessible, and the decisions of our nineteenth century courts often show serious misunderstanding of early American practice. The first step to the correction of such misunderstanding must be to rescue from the obscurity of State archives and other depositories the manuscript records of the more important colonial courts, especially those of last resort."

Important Period Covered.

The first publication presents a picture of Maryland Agrarian Society in the eighteenth century. It reproduces a record of proceedings before the Governor and Council of Maryland, and covers a strategic period in American legal history.

Forthcoming editions of American legal records will include a volume of select cases of the Mayor's Court of New York City from 1674 to 1784.

Prof. Greene pointed out that the series has been made possible through the Littleton-Griswold fund, established by Mrs. Frank T. Griswold, of Radnor, Pa.

Wound Kills Man Who Slew Mother

Death Seals Lips Why He Shot Her.

Wallington, N. J., Dec. 17 (AP) George Dolack, 24, died in a Passaic hospital tonight of a self-inflicted bullet wound and thus probably ended forever the chance that police might learn why he shot and killed his widowed mother, Anna, 64, 24 hours earlier.

Mrs. Dolack had suffered from asthma, another son, John, a former prosecutor's detective, said. John said tonight that George was a quiet, studious, brooding type, and probably exaggerated in his own mind the extent of his mother's sufferings and thought to end her pain

300 London Police Quell Red Rioters

Throng Attempts March on Reich Embassy.

London, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—Three hundred police reinforcements were required today to prevent a mob of several thousands, led by Communist agitators, from reaching the German Embassy.

The throng sought to march on the embassy after a demonstration in Trafalgar Square in protest against the trial of five communists at Lepizig on charges of treason and arson in connection with the burning of the Reichstag in Berlin last February.

The demonstrators began converging on the square shortly afternoon and their ranks were swelled by the arrival of numerous east end Jews after the adjournment of their anti-German boycott meeting in Whitechapel.

Mail Flier Leaps Mile to Save Life In Detroit Fog

Detroit, Dec. 17 (AP).—Carl Day, 37, of Buffalo, flying the mail from Buffalo to Detroit, abandoned his plane and leaped 6,000 feet with his parachute early this morning when heavy fog made a landing impossible. He landed unhurt near Wayne County Airport.

Day was near the end of his gasoline supply when he jumped. He said he had been attempting to land for a half hour. The mail plane left Buffalo at 6:45 p. m. and was due here at 9 p. m.

The plane crashed in a Dearborn township field. American Airways reported mail and express carried by the plane were not damaged.

One white woman and two Negroes were killed, and sawmill property was destroyed when the storm struck the lumber camp. Eleven persons at the camp were injured. A Negro woman was killed and eight Negroes were injured as the tornado swooped down on the plantation.

3 Drown as 2 Cars Fall Through Ice

Fishermen Lost on Lake in Minnesota.

Waconia, Minn., Dec. 17 (AP).—Three men drowned in Lake Waconia today when two automobiles broke through the ice. The victims, all of Minneapolis, were Kenneth Oliver, H. I. Nordby and George A. Wickham. They had gone to the lake to fish.

Oliver, with Dr. J. C. Miller and Eric L. Hahn, Minneapolis, had driven about 900 feet from shore when his car hit a stretch of thin ice and dropped into 15 feet of water. Miller and Hahn crawled through an open window and reached the surface and safety.

The accident in which the others were lost occurred later, not far from the scene of the first. The bodies were recovered.

Accord With Holy See Is Urged Upon Spain

Madrid, Spain, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—Immediate negotiations for a concordat between the Holy See and the Spanish Republic were urged today by Melquiades Alvarez, Liberal-Democrat party leader.

"It is urgent," he said, "that a concordat be reached with the Holy See and a return to normal, friendly relations with the Pope assured."

Hill From Which Wrights Flew Has Moved ¼ Mile in 30 Years

Roving Sand Dune Kept in Place Now by Vegetation.

Killdevil Hill at Kitty Hawk, N. C., from which the first plane actually to fly took off, is a quarter of a mile from its position when that flight was made, 30 years ago yesterday.

Today, according to the National Geographic Society, the memorial which marks the summit of the hill does not mark the birthplace of flight.

The exact geographical location of the take-off is marked by a boulder and tablet which rest on a level stretch of sand.

Killdevil Hill, a sand dune, has moved a quarter of a mile in the last 30 years, but its roving has been stopped by the planting of vegetation upon it.

Atop the hill a winged pylon, 60 feet high, pays tribute to the two aviators. The white exterior of the pylon is North Carolina granite. The interior is lined with pink granite.

On the polished steel doors of the memorial the flight of fowl, the myth of Icarus, experiments with kites and other events in the history of aviation are depicted gorically in relief. Within niches in the walls for p bronze busts of the Wright ers. Another unusual fea the interior is a rustless tarnishable map of the outs airplane flights of the first of aviation.

Spiral stairs lead up the ing shaft of the pylon to a at the top, where a powerf tion beacon flashes a friendl far out on land and sea. T of the memorial is in the a five-pointed star, and acr front of the pylon are carved the names "Wilbur and "Orville Wright," and line "In Commemoration Conquest of the Air."

Austrian Policy Leans Vaguely To Monarchy

Storm Troops Organizer's Statement Hints at Hapsburg Rule.

Vienna, Dec. 17 (AP).—The weathercock of Austrian politics veered vaguely in the direction of a monarchy today when the official government gazette published a declaration of policy by Kurt Schuschnigg, minister of justice and organizer of the Catholic storm troops.

Schuschnigg, without specifically mentioning a monarchy, stressed the storm troops committee would establish a Christian state "with the utmost emphasis upon Austrian tradition, which by no means is confined to boundaries of the present state."

Storm troops, he said, "see the forming of a new central Europe—after dictatorial peace treaties have been overcome—with the possibility of a renewal of the holy empire on modern lines."

Another communique announced Chancellor Dollfuss had been acclaimed commander in chief of the Schuschnigg storm troops.

Whether the actual development of Austria's immediate future will be strongly monarchist remains to be seen. It was recalled Dollfuss' Christian Social party has been by no means entirely monarchist, nor has Dollfuss himself been avowedly in favor of restoration of a kingdom.

On the other hand, Schuschnigg's monarchist sympathies are no secret, and restoration of a Hapsburg rule is periodically discussed in political circles as a possible last resource against Nazis.

Professor Denies Farm Prices Lag

Warren's Aid Claims Boost of 51 Per Cent.

Ithaca, N. Y., Dec. 17 (U.P.).—Charges that prices of farm products have not kept pace with the rising gold quotations were denied today by Dr. F. A. Pearson, professor of prices and statistics at Cornell University and assistant to Dr. George F. Warren, Administration adviser.

Writing in the current issue of Farm Economics, Dr. Pearson recalled that from February to November the price of gold advanced 60.2 per cent, while the average price paid to farmers for all farm products rose 51 per cent. The average wholesale price for 17 basic commodities increased 61 per cent, he claimed, while wholesale commodities advanced 20 per cent.

"Unless interfered with by some artificial means, a rising price level will automatically restore an approximate equilibrium in the price structure," Pearson said.

Mgr. M. F. Foley, 81, Dies in Baltimore

Baltimore, Dec. 17 (AP).—Mgr. Michael F. Foley, 81, pastor of St. Paul's Catholic Church and dean of priests in the Archdiocese of Baltimore, died at his home here this morning. He had been ill about a month.

He was made a monsignor by the late Cardinal Gibbons in 1914, and was ordained 53 years ago. All his active life the priest was identified with the temperance movement, he was one of the pioneer advocates of National prohibition.

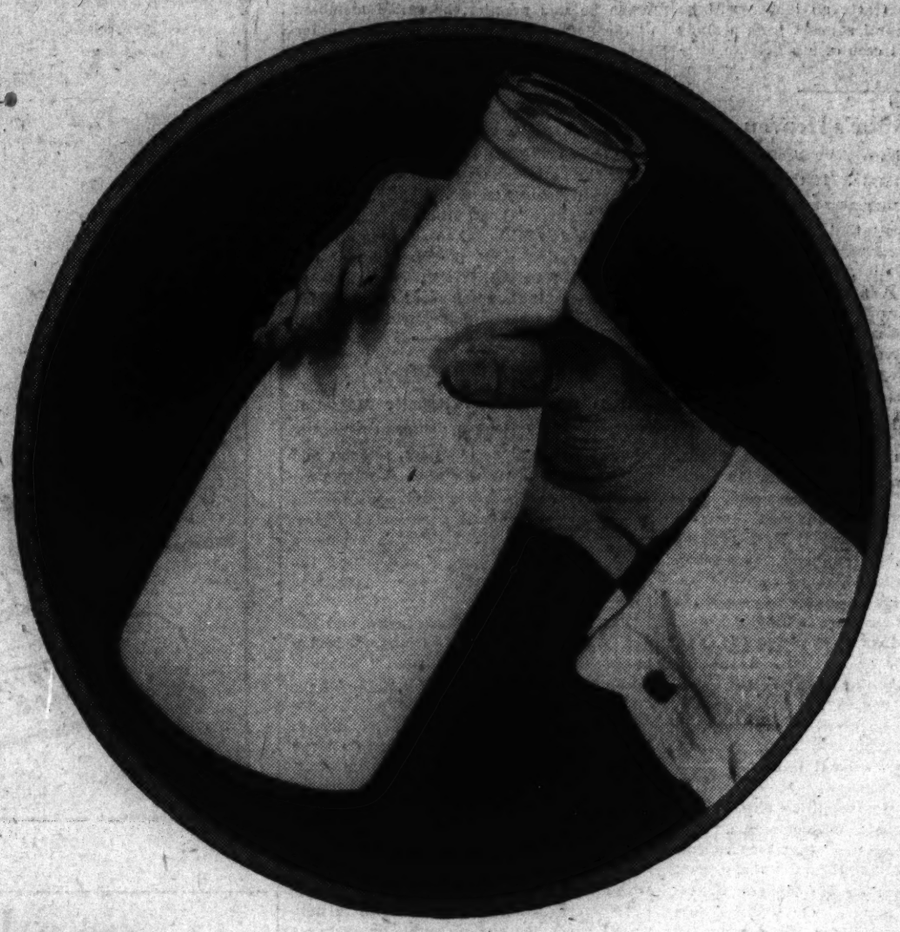
The basis of farm prosperity

The basis of health



We invite you to help us start a great crusade

NATIONAL MILK MONTH

★ People of Washington, by drinking an extra glass of milk a day, you can improve health, shrink the milk surplus and send a quarter of a million extra dollars to the farmers in a month.

DID you know that only 43% of America's milk supply ever finds its way into a bottle? Did you know that, as revealed in a house-to-house survey, 70% of American adults drink no milk at all, in any form? Did you know that, as a result of these facts, the farmer's milk surplus—that part which does not get in bottles to be sold as fluid milk—is getting larger and larger every day, with increasing distress to the milk farmers and to the nation's largest industry?

Believing that the public does not know these simple facts, so basic to national health and prosperity, we have planned National Milk Month and we invite every individual and family in Washington to join us in its inauguration. Just as in a past emergency, the public gladly endured the inconveniences of meatless and wheatless days, people everywhere now may gladly welcome the opportunity to resume normal milk consumption. No undue sacrifice is necessary—co-operation is so simple that one extra glass a day for each person will instantly effect an enormous shrinkage in the milk surplus, help the health of every one and return an extra quarter of a million dollars in cash to the farmers on this milkshed in a month.

How to co-operate

Here are simple suggestions for joining this great public drive for health and prosperity. Find out how much milk the members of your family drink. You may be surprised to discover how many drink no milk at all. Then, simply start your Milk Month today and enjoy at least one extra glass of milk every day for a month. Many people enjoy a glass of warm milk with coffee added (café au lait) with the morning, noon or evening meal. Many families make delicious milk drinks. Many find that sleep is improved by taking a glass of milk last thing at night before going to bed.

The result, beginning immediately, should be a marked improvement in your sense of health and well-being. And the other result will be immediately to start transferring milk from the farmer's unprofitable surplus to bottled milk which is at the very foundation of the farmer's and the nation's prosperity.

Finest bottle of milk in the world

We feel that Washington is an ideal place for the inauguration of National Milk Month because the people of Washington enjoy the finest, richest, most delicious bottle of milk in the world. We pay the farmers on this milkshed a higher price for their milk than is paid anywhere else in America. We pay the farmers extra premiums for better pastures and barns and more scientific care in producing their milk. Our plant is noted in Europe and the United States as the model of dairy perfection—with rigid laboratory-supervised inspection of product, men and methods. This is the obvious place in which to launch this great movement which should spread throughout the length and breadth of the country.

In order to co-operate with National Milk Month, it is not necessary to drink only Chestnut Farms or Chevy Chase Milk. These organizations are sponsoring this movement, but they are not seeking in any way to confine your co-operation to the drinking of milk prepared and distributed by these companies. This is a public movement and is not to be confused with the promotion of any company or group of companies. Choose your favorite bottled milk. Just drink an extra glass each day for a month. See how much better you feel and know that you are helping to start a flood of prosperity towards the farmer which will inevitably find its way into your industry and your home. We invite you to help start National Milk Month—the crusade for health and prosperity!

"Fluid" Milk and "Surplus" Milk

The reputable milk companies of America, such as Chestnut Farms and Chevy Chase, contract with the reputable milk farmers to buy all of their milk. For all that can be bottled and sold as "Fluid" Milk—for drinking and cooking—they agree to pay the farmer a certain fixed price, which is much higher than the price paid for "Surplus" Milk. They agree to take the "Surplus" Milk—milk not going into a bottle—manufacture it into butter, cheese, etc., and to pay the farmer the most that they can, based on the price which they can get for these products. Just now, the warehouses are full of butter, cheese, evaporated and powdered milk—and the price of these products is lower than in years. The national "Surplus" is at present 52.7% of the total. That is too great. It makes the price too low to bring the farmer anything but distress. Increased consumption of "Fluid" Milk is the solution to this problem.

Moving Against Crime.

A broad and comprehensive survey of law-enforcement problems has been undertaken by the American Bar Association. Legal groups in all parts of the country will be asked to cooperate in gathering data upon which the association can formulate a definite program designed to facilitate the administration of justice. Questionnaires are being sent to 1,350 local bar associations and other legal bodies.

Apparently this is the answer of the American Bar Association to the orgies of lawlessness that have broken out in several States during recent weeks. Failure of law enforcement in many instances, costly legal delays, ineffective crime detection and general lack of respect for the law loom up in the background of the lynchings and mob violence which this country is experiencing.

People are inclined to take the law into their own hands because of the inefficiency of enforcement machinery. Of course, mobbery can not be justified because of the shortcomings of the legal system, but more expeditious and efficient handling of criminal cases would go a long way toward the elimination of the motives behind group murder.

The bar association is attacking the problem in its broadest and most positive aspects. Instead of merely fighting against lynching, its chief efforts will be directed against abuses in the administration of law.

Nine problems are to be covered in the bar association survey, as follows: The relationship between politics and crime; the efficiency of prosecuting officers; prevention and detection of crime through police activity; the operations of lawyers who are retained by the underworld; interference by racketeers with legitimate business; codes of criminal procedure; kidnaping and ways of dealing with it; court efficiency in disposing of criminal cases and the arousing of local bar associations to a sense of responsibility for abuses or incompetence in their respective communities.

When the survey is completed the association will formulate a program of reform, and prominent members of the bar will be asked to assume the leadership in a drive to bring about the desired changes. The purpose of the association is "to expose every unhealthy condition in criminal law enforcement," to fix the responsibility for such conditions and to seek their correction. It deserves the cooperation of every lawyer in the United States.

A more propitious time to launch a law-enforcement project could not have been chosen. There are many indications that the public is anxious for leadership in this field. If this ambitious undertaking initiated by the American Bar Association is carried out on an impartial and comprehensive basis, it will be a signal contribution to one of the most important tasks confronting the American people.

Britain's Gold Decision.

Reversing the decisions of two British lower courts, the House of Lords has decided that a holder of bonds containing a gold clause is entitled to be paid interest and principal in gold and not in depreciated Bank of England notes. The British case, which tested the validity of the gold clause in bond contracts, concerned the issues of a Belgian electrical company calling for the payment of interest in sterling, "in gold coin of the United Kingdom, of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on September 1, 1928."

After suspension of gold payments the company met the interest in paper pounds without allowance for depreciation. The bondholder who brought suit contended that he should receive a sum in sterling that would enable him on the day of payment to buy gold of the weight and fineness stipulated as payable under the terms of the contract. The lower courts upheld the contention of the company that the obligation to pay had been discharged by payment in legal tender—that is, depreciated pounds.

Despite technical arguments advanced in support of this view, the practical effect of such a decision was to destroy the validity of the gold clause, depriving the bondholder of all protection against losses from depreciation. Defaults due to inability to pay, and scaling of debt charges by mutual agreement, often are forced by circumstances over which the parties to the contract have no control. But recognition of the obligation to pay is not impaired by such forced adjustments.

Neither should it be lightly denied in the name of expediency. Indeed, in modern industrial communities in which the great bulk of business activities is based upon credit, and the value of property rights depends upon observance of the terms of contracts, governmental policies and court decisions that strike at the sanctity of contract undermine the foundations of orderly economic life.

Although it has no practical bearing upon debtor-creditor relationships in the United States, the British decision will be received with great satisfaction by many Americans as an opportune affirmation of the sanctity of a contractual obligation.

Apologists for the policy of repudiating governmental contracts no longer will be able to derive moral support from a study of the much-cited case of the Belgian electrical company.

The Editor's Heaven.

Dictatorships have their good points, as well as their irritants. If they take away personal liberty, they also remove the necessity for the worry that goes along with trying to solve the problems of a democracy. In the United States, for instance, newspaper editors get gray-haired and puffy under the eyes trying to achieve that neat balance that makes front pages both significant and interesting.

No such worry confronts the Italian editor. All he has to do is to put his feet on his desk, sit back in his chair and read instructions sent out daily from one of the many ministries which Il Duce heads, according to La Stampa Libra, an anti-Fascist newspaper which has come into possession of, and translated, several communiques to editors. Il Duce may be pictured by cartoonists, and even by cameramen, as the ferocious-looking man of iron, but the picture that emerges as one reads his instructions to editors is that of a hen, spreading her wings over her brood, and clucking violently every now and then at those chicks that are inclined to stray away. For instance, on one day, Rule No. 4 said, "Warning is hereby given to abstain from using the words 'supreme hierarchies,' as the party has only one: Il Duce."

Editors were "earnestly requested" on another day not to misspell the name of the Hungarian secretary of commerce, and, again, it was "suggested" that they reprint from Il Popolo, Mussolini's personal organ, a piece on the war on the common housefly. Il Duce is not so busy that he does not have time to consider the question of display. "By the use of large type, great prominence should be given to orders issued by Il Duce for the celebration of Mother and Child's day," another instruction said.

It was not intended, either, that the Italian public should get the wrong impression about Balboa's flight. One prompting said, "Small space should be devoted to the preparation for the arrival of the fliers in the Azores; great prominence, instead, should be given to reports of the take-off from the Azores." On another day, editors were told to "insert, without giving special prominence to it, the news of the accident that befell Ranieri's plane."

A few excerpts from daily bulletins will demonstrate the tender care with which the Italian press must handle Il Duce himself: "Feature the acclamation to Il Duce by the 2,800 teachers of the Opera Nazionale Balilla . . . Bear in mind that all circulars by undersecretaries are issued, not on their personal initiative, but by Il Duce's orders . . . Feature, avoiding all exaggeration, under a two-column headline, the visit paid by Il Duce to Camp Sandre Mussolini . . . All correspondence appearing in foreign papers on the visit of Il Duce to the Pontine reclaimed land should be quoted at length . . . Feature the telegram sent by Il Duce to Balboa on the flight."

Most intriguing of all, however, is the manner of handling depression news.

"Do not advertise the success of the loan in the United States and do not speak of America's inflation policy," one warning said. Others, along the same line, were: "The 'Ambrosians' had a headline on monetary circulation. In this regard it will be advisable to refrain from commenting on the constant increase of the gold reserve in order to avoid drawing to it the attention of foreign financiers. Emphasize the soundness of the lira as a politico-social element, but avoid all technical discussion."

But the piece de resistance is this:

> An article study of the depression has appeared in Regime. It is not timely. The papers should concern themselves rather with signs of recovery. The depression will be examined and studied when it has disappeared.

In dictatorial circles, there is a principle frequently enunciated—most recently by Herr Dr. Goebbels at a gathering of German newspaper men—that the press of the country ought to be an organ upon which the government could play. Apparently there are no sour notes in Italy's diapason.

Legalizing a Fact.

The proposal that Poland inaugurate a practical dictatorship, to be submitted to the Sejm by the powerful Parliamentary party this week, is designed to give legal effect to a situation which, to all intents, has existed since Marshal Pilsudski, tired of the "mouthings" of members of the Sejm and the cabinet, marched into Warsaw seven years ago at the head of troops loyal to him and took command. Although he was premier for a few months and minister of war in recent years, he has lived in the chief palace in Warsaw and nobody has doubted who was in control.

The plan advanced by Pilsudski's party is justified upon the contention that "Poland is between two strong, nonparliamentary governments, Russia and Germany, and is unable longer to retain her democratic forms." It contemplates giving the president of the republic power to designate the premier, the president of the supreme court and the commander in chief of the army, without check upon his authority; he would be free to dissolve parliament, veto its acts, remove cabinet ministers, and designate a candidate to succeed himself. Another candidate may be nominated by the "electors," who are to be speakers of the houses of parliament, the president of the supreme court, the commander in chief of the army and 75 citizens elected by parliament. The country then will be entitled to elect one of the two men—unless the president and the "electors" designate the same man, in which case there will be no vote.

The lower house, or Sejm, is to be elected by popular vote. The upper house, or senate, will be chosen by the president, who will select 40 of the 120 members, and by veterans of the Polish Legion. The upper house can not initiate legislation.

It is frankly recognized in Poland that investing the president with such arbitrary power is nothing more nor less than instituting a dictatorship. Pilsudski has never been patient with parliamentary forms. When he was premier, he called members of the Sejm "vermin" and countless other uncomplimentary names. Although he has managed to ride rough-shod over them, he has never been able to make them like it. Dmowski, who was as important, though not as colorful, a figure in winning Polish freedom as Pilsudski, has never cowered under the ruthlessness of the war minister, but has resisted him consistently.

The "reform" now proposed will make it possible for Pilsudski to abandon all pretense of caring what the members of the Sejm think; indeed, it will be possible to have seven-minute sessions of the national congress, such as Germany held last week.

The Italian Way.

It is reported that Premier Mussolini is preparing to issue a decree, compelling wholesale reductions in wages, salaries and living costs in order to stimulate Italian exports. Since Italy seems resolved to remain upon the gold standard, deflation of domestic prices or direct subsidies to exporters provide the only means of combatting the competition of countries with depreciated currencies.

The process of deflation is slow and imperfect and it encounters serious opposition in countries operating under democratic economic systems. In Great Britain, for instance, efforts to reduce production costs following a return to the gold standard, at the prewar parity were defeated, to a large extent, by the determined antagonism of organized labor to proposed wage cuts.

Italy possesses an advantage over Great Britain in being able to decree deflation of wages and salaries with a view to counteracting the effects of currency depreciation without costly delays. Nevertheless, sweeping decrees to reduce wages result in individual hardships and undoubtedly arouse a certain amount of resentment, since they can not be carried out with absolute impartiality even when living costs are adjusted to meet the lower scale of payments. It follows that only a strong and assured dictatorship would venture to cut wages and salaries on a wholesale scale, even in the name of the common welfare and for the sake of the nation as a whole.

With independent labor organizations virtually eliminated and the officially recognized unions subservient to the will of the Fascist state, it is possible for Italy to act decisively. But if wages were cut often, it might lead to trouble. Wage adjustments forced by the bids and offers of the market may be slow and often inequitable, but at least they are effected by economic processes that do not require governmental intervention and cause popular resentment to be directed against the state instead of against individuals.

Letters to the Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications should be signed with the writer's name. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters should be limited to 300 words.

What's the Trouble?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a universal breakdown of business there must be, it seem, a common cause or causes. It is hardly likely that any great variety of causes could have coincided to produce a like effect everywhere. But it seems entirely conceivable that one or more causes might have had coextensively a serious effect, especially upon business with its sameness of fundamental principles.

It seems also it must have been a major cause or two to have thus paralyzed business everywhere and it is far easier to state the proposition than to identify those causes. And yet the case seems far from hopeless, considering that a sort of master key may be made the solution all around.

A number of things suggest themselves in such an inquiry. Is it the war, with its frightful waste? Or is it economic practices antecedent to that great folly? Or is it the mad pursuit of happiness, with all its extravagances which have been going on a long, long time all over the world without counting the costs until purse and credit are both at the breaking point? Or is it the inequalities of conditions of international exchange of commodities with respect to barriers and monetary standards? Or is it the wide use of machinery with its effect upon employment and the purchasing power? Or is it overpopulation and its Malthusian phenomena? Or is it a deep psychology taking the form of opposition to present forms of government, with a general tendency toward socialization of the political state?

It might be possible to venture remarks upon the main question, but, without adequate experimental foundation, they would not be worth much. This is rather, it seems, for business men of wide experience, whose ideas should be much more illuminating. But they should apply universally. Any mere local remedy would seem to be more or less useless for general conditions. C. M. CLARK.

Praise and Criticism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to congratulate you upon the fine editorial appearing in the issue of December 7, under the title "The New Incentive." The very title is stimulating and the editorial expresses a fine standard in taste and judgment.

One must regret, however, that the tone of the editorial is contradicted by the picture on page 3, of vulgar, unrestrained, disgusting persons who are a disgrace to decent humanity. Your issue of December 6 also contained a picture of drinkers, a picture repugnant to intelligent, refined people who aim at moderation and self-control.

Some of your own admirable phrases, "Motivated by a sense of good taste and by the instincts of decency," "by the desire to recapture self-respect," ought to express your policy on both editorial page and in the news columns. Let the news about liquor be reduced to a minimum of essential, worthwhile information. L. G. BIRCH.

Mr. Robey's Articles.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is called to your attention that readers who are neither Republicans nor Democrats inevitably realize that Robey's articles are glaringly prejudiced and biased in the presentation of facts, in his discussions, and in his conclusions.

The existence of this spirit and attitude of antagonism detracts from the value or benefit a rational reader obtains from a study of these articles because he can never be sure that he is not being given the distorted truth, that pertinent points are not being omitted in order to prove his stand and that, if statistics are quoted, those favoring his argument rather than those most to be depended upon are advanced.

The ever-present knowledge that Robey is usually on the opposition side of practically every problem raised by the administration, since his first appearance on the pages of The Post, apparently merely for the sake of disagreeing with the administration, may even make one discount the reliability of his reasoning, which may be based upon unadulterated truth and cold analyzations.

Because the number of publications in this city are limited, it is hoped that Robey will, as he continues to progress in his field, become more dependable, less influenced by what he thinks his followers may wish to read, more of a molder of responsible opinion and a greater asset to the cause of teaching the body politic on enlightened government, economics and finance.
ALLAN R. FREEMAN.

He Liked an Editorial.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The editorial in Monday morning's Post entitled "The Same Mistake" contains a sane and sober suggestion for the American people in the midst of wild excitement over lawless outbreaks in widely scattered parts of the country. Caught up in a wave of hysteria, "go to," they say, "let us pass a Federal law and put an end to mob violence, once for all."

The righteousness of the intention must be conceded, but the wisdom of the remedy is questionable. Federal law can only reach evils which are widely organized and operate across State lines. Slavery was an established institution with interstate reactions. The liquor traffic operated throughout the Nation under sanction of law, and hence constituted a fit subject for national legislation. The failure of the eighteenth amendment is due to the fact that its advocates failed to produce and sustain a public sentiment requisite to its effective enforcement.

Lynching is not, of itself, an evil apart from the general body of crime. It is but a virulent outbreak of the spirit of lawlessness which afflicts the whole Nation. Its remedy must be generic, and not specific. Had the Dyer antilynching bill been enacted into law, it probably would not have prevented a single lynching during the past ten years. Like the liquor evil, lynching will not yield to national law until there is built up a national sentiment to make the law enforceable. Our statute books are loaded down with laws while lawlessness grows apace. Lynching, like drunkenness, is a moral disease, and the remedy must be of the same nature.

In Praise of Mr. Bennett.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While welcoming the new editor-in-chief, we can not let pass this opportunity to express regret for the resignation of Mr. Ira E. Bennett, whose presence for a generation graced the editorial sanctum. The sixth page of The Post has been one of the brightest lights in American journalism. There has never been a "guess" or a "perhaps," for with painstaking care he has always marshaled his facts behind him and, unafraid, they are set in array. No paper in the Nation has been more liberally quoted, far and near as a finality, on any subject treated.

The patriotic support of the Constitution and the institutions that have grown up under it has been the delight of thousands of readers, many of whom have depended upon The Post to analyze and explain questions of national and international interest. Local development has always had intelligent, enthusiastic support. The banner of patriotism has always been at masthead, and the right side of every question has been presented in bold type; no light has shone more brightly across the continent, and it was always aglow on questions of science, religion, education, morals and the general welfare was never neglected. Mr. Bennett was always fair, and when he took opposing ground his criticisms were clearly set forth and they carried no sting. Not only was his work accurate and correct, but it was scholarly, of really encyclopaedic character, always. We shall miss him and wish him Godspeed, as we say hail and farewell.
ARTHUR GIBSON MORSE.

The Monetary Program.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am writing in reference to the article appearing in The Post of December 6, entitled, "Modernized Greenbackism." Please read it again. If Mr. Robey is just plainly commenting on our monetary program, well, he isn't even posted. If he is trying to impede the President's program, he isn't even subtle. Anyone can see his article is a clumsy effort to one of these. Anyone can see his statements are plainly misleading. His sub-title, "Latest Proposal Is Real Threat to Monetary System," is by no means proven or substantiated by the substance of his article. I run a business in this community, and from discussing this article with the customers I can asure you that one more of this type will brand your paper as a weak cog in the Tory press.

Father Coughlin is idolized by the people around here. He has taught them a few things about present day politics. It will take a much more clever man than Mr. Robey to talk convincingly to them against the President's monetary program.

The Deacon Isn't a Hypocrite Because His Brother Operates a Still

By Robert Quillen.

Jokesmiths have had a good time since the two Carolinas voted against repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

It is a good joke. When two States, notoriously addicted to moonshining, solemnly register their disapproval of legal liquor, the sight is one that appeals to America's sense of humor.

But the joke shouldn't be taken too seriously. A State is not a unit. It contains many people who have many convictions. And to assume that a dry vote in a region of illicit stills indicates universal hypocrisy is, to say the least, rather stupid.

When North and South Carolina voted on the question of repeal, the majority of the people were not sufficiently interested to vote at all. They did not care enough one way or the other to enter a polling place and mark a ballot.

The minority that voted was composed of two elements—the "liquor crowd" and the "church crowd."

The first group consists of those who make liquor, those who drink it and others, personally dry, who still believe that every citizen has the Constitutional right to drink what and when he pleases.

The other and larger group is composed of those who hate liquor. They know it only as a cause of violence, homicide, wrecks, poverty and wretchedness.

Every community contains some of them who live in shame because of a father, husband or son who is a drunkard. They cringe before the well-meant sympathy of their neighbors. As much as they can they hide from the public. For years they have had no acquaintance with happiness or pride or peace of mind. Night after night they have stood in their doorways, white-faced and sick with shame and said: "Bring him in."

They are not hypocrites. They vote as they hate. And their hate made the Carolinas dry.

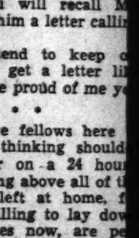
Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

HERE is another one of those letters from a Young Liberal serving at the front here in the Revolution to his sweetheart back home. I think these letters which are run from time to time, are truly amazing in that they reveal these young revolutionaries in a light entirely different from that in which we have been seeing them. We had the impression, for example, that in their desire to make over the country they were peculiar, that, indeed, they would try to make over their sweethearts.



BARGERON.

These letters show, though, that they are very human fellows, fired with a zeal for bigger and better things, of course, and imbued with their theories, but that in the final analysis they have the same emotions as the rest of us. It has been truly said that the love of a woman beats behind every endeavor. Read the letter:

* * * *

DARLING HELEN:

The thinking has been particularly heavy here on the front of late. Sometimes I think that I shall think until I die. It is mighty hard and I am afraid it will be a long struggle to make over this country. It has developed to be so very big and wide. But my love for you, darling, presses me on.

Another thing, too, darling, we are determined to think on until he have avenged the loss of Thinker Moley. He was brought down, you probably read in the papers, by Ace Cordell of the enemy force. But he went down fighting and although he was badly maimed, there are indications that he may be able to rejoin us soon. There were some reports the other day that he was getting back into his thinking togs. Even if he doesn't come back, however, he will always live in the glow of the aura that was bestowed upon him. You will recall Mr. Roosevelt wrote him a letter calling him "Dear Ray."

Darling, I intend to keep on thinking until I get a letter like that. You will be proud of me you know.

* * * *

DARLING, we fellows here on the front, thinking should be to shoulder on a 24 hour watch and thinking above all of the sweethearts we left at home, for whom we are willing to lay down our thinking lives now, are perturbed about one of our comrades. We don't seem to get the straight on Comrade Tugwell, one of our very best thinkers. We heard in the lines that he was brought down by Enemy George Peek and then we heard that instead, he brought down the enemy, that he came out unscathed. Oh, you can't imagine, darling, how our inability to get the truth of these reports worries us and beats down our morale.

It seems that while Enemy Peek did lose his command he took over the command of Smith Brookhart who while not a Young Liberal body is one in mind. It seems to leave us right where we were.

* * * *

DO you know the latest thing we thinkers have thought of? With a view to expediting our remaking of the country, we plan to cut off the Florida peninsula. That thing has always made the country look lop-sided and again, there is a dry cleaner down there who won't charge what we think he should charge for pressing a pair of pants. To cope with him we would have to send a squad of our thinkers down there and thereby weaken our forces here at the front.

Then by just slicing off the peninsula, there will be that much less territory in which Miss Perkins will have to put shoes on the Southern Negroes. Well, remember I am thinking away my life for you.

"Your thinking fool."

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

The motion picture called "The Private Life of King Henry VIII," inspired by the book written by the accomplished historian, Francis Hackett, is one of the most notable of the "talkies" now being exhibited. It is extremely fortunate in having as its leading actor the great artist, Charles Laughton, who excels in all kinds of effects, both broad and subtle.

King Henry himself never suffered from excess of modesty; but even he would have had his enormous self-confidence still further heightened if he could have known that he and his three children were to rule England for nearly 100 years. He ruled from 1509 to 1547, 38 years; his son Edward VI, from 1547 to 1553, 6 years; his daughter, Mary, from 1553 to 1558, 5 years, and his daughter, Elizabeth (whose mother was Anne Boleyn), from 1558 to 1603, 45 years, so that from 1509 to 1603 this man and his three children ruled England. Not only that, but he and his daughter Elizabeth built up the power of the throne and the national sentiment in Britain to such an extent that even today the most popular man in England is the king.

It would be an error to suppose that Henry VIII was wholly admirable. This is what Dickens said of him:

"We now come to King Henry VIII, whom it has been too much the fashion to call Bluff King Hal, and Burly King Harry, and other fine names, but whom I shall take the liberty to call plainly, one of the most detestable villains that ever drew breath."

Relief Outlay Perils Credit, League Holds

Economy Body's Petition to Roosevelt Urges Expense Cuts.

that the status of National credit should come under discussion and that fears should be expressed of an "uncontrolled inflation" when the Government may be forced to resort to the printing of fiat money.

The petition declares the country's danger does not lie in a voluntary adoption of unsound money, but rather in a gradual creeping up of the National debt to a point where use of unsound money is no longer preventable.

Deals Only With Credit.

The league, while realizing importance of a sound monetary policy, is dealing solely with the question of National credit. The petition states "if the dollar were stabilized tomorrow, such stabilization would necessarily break down in the face of continued National deficits. There is little use in debating 'stabilization' and other questions of monetary policy until the foundation—a strong National credit, based on an honestly balanced budget—is solidly established."

It is pointed out that a true balancing of the budget must include the huge and rapidly mounting expenditures for emergency purposes.

The league takes the position that the national debt, great as it is, is still supportable on the basis of a sound currency, but adds that "if increase at the present rate is much longer tolerated, the American people may wake up too late to repair the damage."

Reference is made to President Roosevelt's message to Congress March 10, in which he emphasized importance of an unimpaired National credit, and to his address to the American people October 22, when he declared that "Government credit will be maintained and a sound currency will accompany a rise in the American commodity-price level."

Expense of Veterans.

When the Economy League made its petition to the President and Congress May 4, 1932, the petition recalls, the primary issue involving the National credit was that of vast veterans' expenditures, then absorbing nearly half of all Federal revenue and threatening to rise to still more fantastic heights.

"The enactment of the National Economy Act March 20, brought under control the 'ordinary' expenditures of the Government and thus did more than any other single measure to give confidence to the people. Now, however, these savings have been submerged in the vast flood of 'emergency' expenditures—a new danger, corresponding in importance to that dealt with by the Economy Act."

The petition says that the league recognizes difficulties in an early balancing of the budget. It believes, however, that if the supreme importance of ceasing to pile up the National debt is recognized, means can be found to accomplish the result. The solution must be sought in a combination of careful but drastic reductions of "emergency" expenditures, with such additional taxation as may then be required to cover all expenditures.

Five-Point Program.

Five points are outlined as necessary in balancing the budget. They are:

1. The debt service should be provided for.
2. The regular operating expenses should be held within strictest limits of economy, and should not be permitted to exceed appropriations for the current fiscal year. Expenditures for veterans should conform to principles laid down by the President in his address to the American Legion.
3. Such provision for relief to unemployed should be made as is essential to supplement provision made by States and local communities. The primary obligation of States and local communities to care for their own should be insisted upon.
4. The whole question of "emergency" expenses should be brought under review, including public works expenditures.
5. After all practicable reductions and expenditures are made, additional taxes should be levied to cover the gap between the reduced expenditures and anticipated receipts under present laws.

Ready for Sacrifices.

"We believe," the petition says in conclusion, "that the people are willing to make great sacrifices in submitting to new taxation, on condition that future expenditures are drastically cut and that they are assured that their sacrifice will accomplish the desired result."

In making the petition public, Henry H. Curran, director of the Economy League, said "the purpose of this petition is to hang up a red lantern in the road that leads to a dangerous degree of debt. There is a point beyond which it is not safe to go. Anybody who is in debt knows what I mean. A debt is a debt—it has to be paid. Much debt means little credit, and little credit means much trouble, for a nation as well as for an individual."

could identify soldiers in civilian clothes among the attackers.

"Everone in the building started to run, most of them escaping across adjacent roofs. They were fired on from the streets as they fled.

"The mob then rushed into the building and began damaging the presses and linotypes and other equipment. They stole typewriters, broke the furniture and then poured gasoline over everything and set the place on fire.

"I was the last to leave, departing by a rear door. I was unable to save the radio receivers, on which the United Press report was coming into the offices from New York when the fighting began.

"I think several were killed and wounded in the building."

The mob looted the house of Juan Bacigalupi, business manger of El Pais, one report said. Several small newsboys were among the injured.

The incident at El Pais followed a day of uneasiness in the capital. The day's activities started with a projected demonstration against the new 50 per cent law, requiring all firms in Cuba to hire at least 50 per cent native Cubans, rather than foreigners.

The police prevented the demonstration. The mob, however, palpably seeking trouble, started for the El Pais office. One version of the start of the fighting and fire said several soldiers guarding the newspaper building fired over the heads of the mob.

Members of the newspaper staff then were said to have fired directly into the crowd, after which the troops joined the mob and entered the building. Villalon, however, denied that any member of the staff had fired on the mob.

President Grau refused to comment, but said he might have a statement later tonight.

Alfredo Hornedo, publisher of El Pais, told the United Press he intended to rebuild his plant and continue the newspaper as soon as possible.

"My first concern is to repair the plant and get El Pais back into circulation as soon as possible, Hornedo said.

NRA Proposes New Consumer Board Set-Up

Body in Every County Is Seen as Protection on Prices.

show is for the purpose of protecting the consumer. That is one of the things the critics don't seem to understand. All of us are consumers and all of us represent consumers. The President really is the head of the consumers organization."

Discussion of consumer problems arose from a visit to Gen. Johnson's office late Saturday of a group of about 25 persons representing consumers interests. They included representatives of the emergency council of consumers organizations.

The emergency council has repeatedly demanded the resignation of the Consumers Advisory Board, charging that it has not been functioning. The delegation was invited by Mrs. Mary Rumsey, chairman of the Advisory Board, to see Gen. Johnson and express themselves directly to him.

As a result of the complaints Gen. Johnson suggested that the delegation name a represnetative to act as his special assistant.

Two Representatives Named.

The delegation designated two representatives, Leon Henderson, of the Russell Sage Foundation, and F. J. Schlink, director of Consumers Research, Inc. Gen. Johnson said these assistants would have the status of volunteer workers. He said they would be free to make any recommendations, and that they would be heard whenever they so desired.

Gen. Johnson said the status of Mrs. Rumsey and of the Consumers Advisory Board would not be changed.

Gen. Johnson said that price complainants were given an opportunity to be heard December 15, but that the hearing was postponed until January 9 because there were not sufficient people present.

He said that one of the functions of the code authorities, of the Emergency Councils and of the Consumers advisory board, must be to guard against extortion and undue price increases.

Codes Being Watched.

"There will be plenty of opportunity for anybody to kick about prices or anything else," he said. "We are watching now to see how these codes work. Economics is not an exact science. It is a pseudo-science. We can not set up every provision rigidly. Any decision can be changed at any time.

"I feel that some of these kickers don't quite understand what the whole show is about."

Gen. Johnson feels that it was necessary first to set up the codes and then see that they function with the interest of the consumer safeguarded.

Another attack on NRA administration has come from Norman Thomas and Louis Wolman, Socialist leaders, the Associated Press reported.

They charge that NRA has been "packed against labor," and "if the condition is not remedied by giving labor large representation on the code authorities, the gains registered during the first six months will be destroyed."

Says Wages Are Too Low.

Principal Socialist criticism was that the code wages were too low, hours too long, that there is no equal "partnership" between labor and business; that price-fixing powers will run the cost of living out of relation to purchasing power, and that too many NRA officials are not in sympathy with labor.

The Emergency Council, in a statement, said:

"Only through the adequate representation of consumer interests can any degree of industrial recovery be had. Members of the Consumers' Board must realize they have obtained few safeguards for the people who pay.

"In justice to their own National organizations they should resign so that their own memberships might not be led into the belief that the board has functioned effectively.

"The five women members who are leaders of the League of Women Voters, National Federation of Women's Clubs, and National Consumers' League especially should no longer permit themselves to be used as window dressing.

"They, in particular, seem to be overawed by Gen. Johnson's insistence that the consumer can wait. With every code fixed for the trade association monopolies and not one consumer representative on any code authority after 10 months of NRA activity, it is high time they took this stand."

Lumber Trade Seen Profiting In NRA Report

(Associated Press.)

Describing the lumber code as "little less than the salvation" of the industry, the lumber code authority's report to the National Recovery Administration yesterday said it marked the release of small operators "from economic serfdom."

The report, prepared by C. Arthur Bruce, executive officer of the authority, said general satisfaction with the code was shown by the "minimum of complaints and appeals" despite "propaganda on the part of interested concerns which have profited in the past by the general chaotic conditions" of small mills.

Small mills heretofore, he added, have been the victims of trade methods they were powerless to change.

Only 171 charges of violations of wage and hours provisions had been filed up to December 1, the report said, and of these 27 resulted in proper adjustment and 22 were found to be groundless. Supporting evidence was found in 19 cases. Of the remainder, 17 were listed as under investigation and 22 were said to have resulted from misunderstanding of the code provisions.

Only 16 appeals from decisions of regional administrative agencies have been made, the report observed, and practically all of those were concerned with some phase of production control. In only two cases were the decisions of the lower regulatory bodies revealed.

Referring to the appeals of the Willamette Valley Lumber Co. and Westport Lumber Co., both Oregon concerns, the report said those were the only cases which have been carried into the courts. They have been set for hearing at Portland today.

Bruce's report said benefits to the workers in the industry were shown by an increase of 5 per cent in the number of employes during September, the first full month under the code, as compared with July, the last full month before code approval. He said the pay roll gain was 14 per cent by the same comparison while the average wage an hour increased 39 per cent.

NRA Is Only a Relief Agency, Declares Fess

Lancaster, Pa., Dec. 17 (AP).—United States Senator Simeon D. Fess, former National Republican chairman, told members of the Young Men's Christian Association today that the NRA has done nothing except dispense relief.

He declared the United States can not hope for recovery without "A more orderly program of conservative legislation" and characterized the recovery program as "sound in theory but difficult to put in practice."

Mencken Collars 2 Noisy Pacifists over pamphlets entitled "War and Fascism," and, in voices that grew in volume, denounced war and those who would have it.

Suddenly the two arose and stalked to the back room, from which pleasant noises could be heard. They demanded admittance, but H. E. Buchholz, the club's sergeant at arms, refused. So one of them swung on Buchholz's ear, which began to bleed.

"I saw blood, blood and Buchholz," declared Mencken. He charged behind him came Kopf, Dr. Raymond Pearl, Johns Hopkins professor of genetics, Dr. Franklin Hazlehurst, the surgeon, and Gustave Strube, conductor of the Peabody student orchestra. Beer was spilled and chairs overturned.

Pursued by Mencken.

The rush of enraged culture was too much for the pacifists. They ran, but Mencken pursued them and after a struggle on the sidewalk, he and his cohorts captured the two and held them for police. Today they appeared in court to testify but, when Coe and Pinkerton's attorney argued that a night in jail was sufficient punishment, they agreed not to press the case—on one condition.

"We've got to get a release," declared Mencken. "If they are communists I don't trust them. They'll go back to Washington and claim they won a victory."

So Coe and Pinkerton signed a statement saying they would take no action.

Before he left, Mencker invited Alva Lampkin, defense attorney, to be the guest of the club some night.

State to Hunt Accomplice Of Crawford

Police Have Few Clews to "Charley Johnson," Named in Crime.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Leesburg, Va., Dec. 17.—Search for "Charley Johnson," accomplice of George Crawford in the murder of Mrs. Agnes Boeing Ilsley and her maid, Mina Buckner, was resumed today.

When Loudoun County jury yesterday named life imprisonment as the penalty for Crawford, it was influenced largely, one of its members explained afterward, by the plea of Dr. Charles Houston, chief of defense counsel, that the mysterious, unidentified "Johnson" was chiefly responsible for the crime.

Houston's argument, "if you wipe out George Crawford, you'll never catch Charley Johnson," helped the convicted man to escape the anticipated death penalty.

Little is known about "Johnson." He spent the Sunday before the murder, two years ago, in Crawford's company and they were seen together near Middleburg on the eve of the crime, and also when they abandoned Mrs. Ilsley's automobile at South Washington, Va., early on the morning of January 13, 1932.

Witnesses, who placed Crawford at the scene of the murder, gave only the vaguest description of the accomplice. Crawford himself furnished a nonexistent Washington, D. C., address. In the absence of adequate evidence regarding "Johnson," attention focused on Crawford.

Now that the latter has been spared his life, because he is the only person who could identify "Johnson" as the actual slayer of Mrs. Ilsley and Mrs. Buckner, the State is determined to bring Crawford's accomplice to justice.

Commonwealth's Attorney John Galleher will go to Richmond to follow a faint trail. It is believed the fugitive lives there, under a name other than "Johnson." It was brought out at the trial that Crawford used several aliases and the name he gave for his accomplice is not the one under which the Richmond suspect is being sought.

New Filipino Party Formed

Backers of Hawes-Cutting Freedom Proposal Organize.

Manila, P. I., Dec. 17 (AP).—Advocates of acceptance for the offer of independence for the Philippines after a decade of preparation, tonight formally forsook the dominant Nacionalista party and launched the "Nacionalista party for independence."

Senator Sergio Osmena, who led the main fight for acceptance of the Hawes-Cutting independence act, was elected president of the executive committee of 25. Manuel Roxas, ousted speaker of the Insular House, was chosen vice-president at the one day convention attended by 4,000 persons.

Roxas declared the Hawes-Cutting act was "murdered," and charged Manuel Quezon, head of the Nacionalista party, "killed the law with treachery."

Osmena said the new move meant the Philippines now have a definite two-party system.

Bartender Slain In Roadhouse Raid

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—Five bandits today shot up a Southwest Side roadhouse, killed a bartender and got away with less than $100.

The five lined up more than 100 patrons in the Harlem Nut House and ordered all to throw their valuables on a table. The leader fired twice in the air to frighten the crowd, but the effect was to start a mad dash for exits and only a few remained to give up their money and jewelry.

Just Folks.

By Edgar A. Guest.

The Brighter Side.

Though life has its trouble and life has its care
And often its dark days of sorrow,
There is always the hope that the sky will be fair
And the heart will be happy tomorrow.
There is always the light of a goal just ahead,
A glimpse of the dream we're pursuing,
In spite of the difficult pathways we tread,
There is much it is good to be doing.

Time empties the purse of the pennies of youth,
The heart of its innocent laughter,
But gives in return just a few grains of truth
And the promise of more to come after.
There's never a new day lived out to the end,
However life's tempests may pitch us,
But what with a triumph, a joy or a friend
The swift, fleeting hours may enrich us.

There is so much to do and there's so much to see,
In spite of the troubles that fret us;
So much to wait for and so much to be,
If only the future will let us—
That life with its burdens and life with its tears
And its heart burning touches of sadness
Still lures us all on to the end of our years
With its friendships, its loves and its gladness.

BAKER.

WHEN the Male Chorus at Interstate Commerce Commission gives its next concert in January, it will open its fourteenth consecutive season. It has been one of the In-Com-Co Club's most flourishing activities.

This talented group has appeared at White House functions and before joint sessions of Congress. It has also participated in joint concerts with other male singing organizations in Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia. To date the personnel of the chorus includes many men who have been singing together for nearly 14 years. As the chorus has grown, so have its audiences. The concerts are prepared with a view to pleasing a variety of musical tastes.

At the January concert Miss Aurelia Beck, contralto, will be presented as soloist. Miss Beck will sing several numbers with the chorus in addition to her solos.

The chorus is supported by subscriptions from the I. C. C. personnel and from outside friends.

Persons desiring to assist the chorus as a patron for the 1934 season are urged to forward their subscriptions to Harold M. Brown (*), 1106 Hurley-Wright Building.

MISS LUCILLE HATCHER.

LET'S spend three minutes in Carthage, not that ancient city on the Mediterranean, but America's own little city of 11,000 friendly people out in Missouri where the Ozarks begin.

Pride flashes in the eyes of Miss Lucille Hatcher, Office of Chief of appointments, Internal Revenue, as she describes her home town.

We have an ideal combination there. With numerous industries, rich farm lands and a mild climate in the foothills of the mountains, what more could one desire for a home site?

Now that sounds a bit like a chamber of commerce lecture. Not strange. Miss Hatcher was assistant secretary of the C. of C. for several years. She is a graduate of Rude College, having previously been graduated from the Carthage High School.

After hearing this charming blonde Missourian tell of the beauties of Jaspar County, we resolve to include Carthage in the itinerary of our next tour of the Southwest. We'd like to see the huge marble quarries, restful shaded streets, neat buildings and meet the hospitable people.

We'd like to peep in on the Spanish Club, where Miss Hatcher was an active member and swim in one of the pools where she has spent so many enjoyable afternoons.

Today's Epitaph.

I'd like to write an epitaph,
I'd like to sing a song
To make you Fed'ral workers laugh,
So nothing will seem wrong.

I'd like to write a sonnet,
I'd like to sing a lay,
But I'm too tired, doggonit,
So I guess I won't today.

'Twas the night before Christmas—and every stocking in the house was bulging with splendid gifts selected through the offerings in "Holiday Hints" from The Post's Classified Columns.

Duce to Hear British Views On Arms Pact

4-Power Parley Will Be Discussed by Simon in Rome.

Rome, Dec. 18 (AP).—The possibility of calling a four-power meeting to solve the disarmament tangle, said the strictly supervised Fascist press today, is likely to be discussed by Premier Mussolini and Foreign Minister Sir John Simon of Great Britain when the latter arrives early this week.

Sir John's visit to Rome will be the first of several calls at European capitals he intends to make during the Christmas holidays in line with proposals for direct disarmament conversations, following adjournment of the Geneva Disarmament Conference.

It is known that Il Duce will exert every effort to bring about such a four-power meeting. He considers it necessary at least as a preliminary to the continuance of the Geneva conference.

Simon, according to press reports, is amicably disposed to the idea, but whether it would be considered advisable to convoke such a meeting without assurance of French attendance is a matter of doubt.

Undersecretary of State Fulvio Suvich returned from Berlin today, where he went on a mission for the Italian government, and brought back a new clarification of the German viewpoint regarding reform of the League of Nations and disarmament problems in general.

It was understood Suvich received assurance from Chancellor Hitler that Germany will support the Italian initiative directed at revival and reform of the league, coupled with reiteration that Germany will not recede from its disarmament demands.

Germany Baptizes 151 Red Children

Former Communist Center Scene of Ceremony.

Berlin, Dec. 17 (AP).—A mass baptism of 151 children between the ages of 6 and 14 took place today at Osterkirche, a former Communist stronghold.

Three pastors officiated. The affair was described as "the first successful achievement in Germany of a Christianity truly commissioned by the people," an aim of the Nazi party.

One minister said that, although parents had not returned to Christianity, "children must find a way back to God, without whose blessing no real community can exist."

Mexico to Discuss American Claims

Rodriguez Seeks Special Powers to Negotiate.

Mexico City, Dec. 17 (AP).—President Abelardo L. Rodriguez will ask the Mexican Congress next week for special powers in handling foreign relations, it was unofficially announced in the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate.

The president has already been granted special authority on finance and war.

His request for special powers on foreign relations will be made next week in order to adjust with the United States Government claims of American citizens during the revolution, it was reported.

Mother Slays Daughter, Self

Girl, 17, Shot on Coast, Other Poisoned; Believed From St. Louis.

Los Angeles, Dec. 17 (AP).—Two women, tentatively identified as Mrs. A. E. Eddy, 50, and her daughter, Dorothy, 17, of St. Louis, are dead, the victims of what police described as murder and suicide.

Detectives, finding the bodies in a hotel room, said the woman had shot the girl and ended her own life by drinking poison. The two registered at the hotel Thursday as Mrs. J. H. Schumacker and Mary Schumacker, of Chicago.

Detectives said a torn telegram blank which they pieced together bore the name of A. E. Eddy, of Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, believed the husband and father.

Repeal Ends Rich Trade for Papeete

South Sea Port's Rum Row Is No More.

Papeete, Tahiti, Dec. 17 (AP).—Repeal of the prohibition law of the United States has ended years of liquor smuggling from this South Sea port into America.

The Marechal Foch, laden with several thousand cases of whisky, departed November 29 from Papeete, and the agency here for supplying the Pacific rum row off the Mexican Coast has been closed.

For years Papeete has held a position in the Pacific Ocean equivalent to that of Nassau in the Bahama Islands and the Bermudas as a receiving and shipping station for liquors destined for the United States.

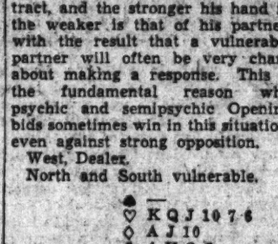
Beautiful Bidding.

When a nonvulnerable opponent opens the bidding a vulnerable Bridge player, even with an enormous hand, generally finds it difficult to reach the correct contract, and the stronger his hand is, the weaker is that of his partner, with the result that a vulnerable partner will often be very chary about making a response. This is the fundamental reason why psychic and semipsychic Opening bids sometimes win in this situation, even against strong opposition.

West, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

West	North	East	South
1♠(1)	2♠(3)	Pass	3♡(3)
Pass	6♡(4)	Dbl.(5)	Pass
Pass	Redbl.(6)	Pass	Pass
Pass

1—West, not vulnerable, essays a semipsychic Opening with his seven-card suit and an otherwise nearly trickless hand. Possibly a more effective bid in such a situation would be an Opening four-spade bid, although this appears fraught with too much danger of a tremendous set.

2—This bid is Forcing to game. Of course, North knows that his partner's hand must be well-nigh trickless. In such a situation it is essential that steps be taken to insure that the bidding will be kept open until game is reached.

3—With five spades, four hearts, three diamonds and one club, South views with distaste the necessity of making any bid whatever. However, in view of the fact that the bid indicates heart support and also that he can not pass a Forcing bid, South responds with his only unbid four-card suit.

4—A very fine bid. If South has four hearts the contract at worst can be defeated but one trick.

5—East can not be greatly blamed for the Double as, after all, his partner has opened the bidding.

The guests were Anna Powell, Sally Lee Young, Hattie Paula Heath, Nancy Emerich, Lorna Morley, Lois Hechinger, Hildegarde von Boetticher, Bettsy Smyth, Marcia Meyers, Geraldine Grossner and Katherine Compton.

The children were entertained by a magician who did many tricks which delighted them.

Mr. and Mrs. Graves at a small table had as their guests Mrs. W. E. Heath and Mr. Briggs Cimtich.

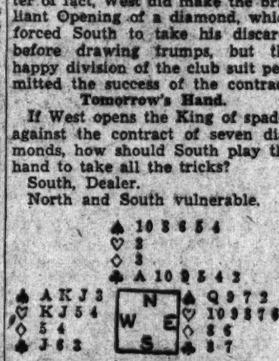
The most it can cost is 200 points and it may gain 380.

Of course, it is obvious the hand is made laid down, the only loser being the Ace of trumps. As a matter of fact, West did make the brilliant Opening of a diamond, which forced South to take his discards before drawing trumps, but the happy division of the club suit permitted the success of the contract.

Tomorrow's Hand.

If West opens the King of spades against the contract of seven diamonds, how should South play the hand to take all the tricks?

South, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.



The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

We Use Purest Soap in Cleaning Rugs
The most universal of all cleansing agents is soap. And we use plenty of it—the finest—in cleaning rugs. Pure soap is harmless to rug fibers, it is easy on dye colors; it dissolves and loosens soil, grit and grease particles most effectively. We scrub your rugs with purest soap—that's why they stay clean longer—look fresher and give extra years of service.

No End of Books

Christmas Gifts for the Woman Who Has Joined a Literary Club, the Man Who Reads Essays at Breakfast, and Any One Who "Wants to Write."

I suppose there are 100,000 flushed and indomitable souls in this country who crave to be authors, and actually do something about it. As for those who "want to write" and who succeed—say on odd Thursdays—in starting rosily at the top of the sheet with what seems like a prose poem and who end the paragraph in a pencil-chewing desperation, they must amount to a round million. But even if the sheet is laid away in a sudden huff, ten to one the writer will seize on the next book he meets with the hungry eye and pure golden delight of the true amateur. The chap who can just manage "Raggle-Taggle Gypsies-O" with two fingers on the piano is the one who watches entranced the hands of Mr. Rachminoff.

For this legion of amateurs—the heart of the reading public—there is no better gift at hand than "Authors: Today and Yesterday" (H. W. Wilson Co., $5), a huge and handsome volume giving the biographies, portraits and lists works of 320 prominent authors living or still widely read in our day. Though the book complements a previous volume, "Living Authors" (Wilson, 1931), it is no gathering up of crumbs. Conrad, Hardy Henry James, "Saki," D. H. Lawrence, Proust and Elinor Wylie are among the "great dead" who are included. Of those still living, an index of the book's range may be seen in the names of "Colette," William Allen White, Kay Boyle, James Truslow Adams, Robert Hichens, and Stuart Chase. The field, though I have scarcely implied it, is international.

What makes the book especially interesting is that the greater part of the living authors have written autobiographies especially for it, and have mentioned with informality and charm a great number of personal facts which any woman would find joy in repeating to the next meeting of her reading club. Francis Stuart, author of "Pigeon Irish" and "Glory," writes, "I like frankly bad books, so long as they are exciting." Laurence Housman says he is "a great admirer of the work of his brother, A. E. Housman, the writer of 'A Shropshire Lad;' who, however, does not return the compliment." Joseph Roth, author of "Radetzky March," writes of himself, "I have no great public and no great income. I expect neither one nor the other."

So up-to-date is the volume that "Radetzky March," as well as other recent works, are mentioned in the bibliographies. The editor, Stanley J. Kunitz, and his assistants have done a tremendously fine piece of work. For anyone interested in writers and everything pertaining to them, "Authors: Today and Yesterday" is as rich as the Kimberley mines.

"Essayist" is a weak and namby-pamby word for Christopher Morley. He himself calls the term an "emetic epithet." The writing he now brings forward in "Internal Revenue" (Doubleday Doran, $2.50) is really the notebook of an agile and keenly interested mind moving throughout the length and breadth of America (and Hawaii) in the years 1928-1933. Mr. Morley has his especial interests, among them book-stores and book-sellers, Shakespeare (he went out to the University of Hawaii to lecture on Shakespeare), street signs and railroad trains. But beyond that it is quite impossible to generalize. His notes in this book cover everything from the ice-cube pantries of the Alexander Young Hotel in Honolulu to a frank letter of Thomas De Quincy's, with all way-stops delightedly observed. For sheer gusto with the oddities of life they would be hard to beat. Everywhere he went he seemed to have a superlatively interested time. To the book-minded person in particular Mr. Morley's enthusiasms will be downright contagious. But everyone can enjoy his humor, even in a pun—he is speaking of a character of "Saki's:" "Clovis, Playboy of the Week-end World, I have always supposed to be so-called because he was so appallingly frank." At the end of the volume are a few pages of photographs, "souvenirs * * * I had an impulse to share with the reader." "Internal Revenue" will brighten up the Christmas morning of any bibliophile, and most other people.

Just because it treats of an out-of-the-way subject, just because its contents are such endlessly pleasant reading, just because the book is so elegantly printed and bound, "An Anthology of Elizabethan Dedications and Prefaces" (University of Pennsylvania Press, $3) will delight the heart of the real book-lover. Miss Clara Gebert, a profund student of Elizabethan literature, with a wit which shows itself in her selections, has gathered 120 examples of the florid, humorous, subacid and sentimental writings which the Elizabethans prefixed to their published works. The custom has pretty largely faded from our times, but I can not help wishing the day would return when an author, in presenting his opus to the public, would write as did Nathaniel Field in 1612: "Reader, the salesman swears you'll take it very ill if I say not something to you. In truth, you are a stranger to me; why should I write to you? You never wrote me, nor I think will answer my epistle. . . . " In those lines one can still see the saucy author of "A Woman Is a Weathercock."

The year 1933 is the centenary of Charles Dickens' first appearance in print. But, strangely enough, this beginning of one of the most whirlwind careers in literature was never reprinted verbatim until it is now placed between the covers of "Dickens: Positively His First Appearance" (The Argonaut Press, London, 5 shillings). Mr. F. J. Harvey Darton tells the whole story, in this neat little volume, of how an unknown young man of 21, after posting his manuscript up a dark court in fear and trembling, bought a copy of "The Monthly Magazine" six months later and found himself in all the glory of print. The story, "O Dinner at Poplar Walk," was later revised by Dickens for inclusion in the "Sketches of Boz" three years later. But slight as the changes were, Mr. Darton finds that Dickens had begun "to temper spontaneity with foresight," had, in those first brief years, made a "beginning of imaginative victory." The book gives one a clear notion of Dickens' earliest development, bringing into relation with his growth his disappointment in love and his liberalistic leanings. Strong as that genius was, it had to take pains. If, then, you have a friend who put that first despairing paragraph away in a huff, here is the most inspiriting and yet tactful gift.

THEODORE HALL.

Gertrude Stein Writes an Opera Opera Writes An

About Lucy About Lily About tra-la-la-la Lucy tra-la-la Lily.

New York, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—Gertrude Stein, Gertrude Stein, Gertrude Stein! Gertrude's written an opera, tra-la-la-la, about Lucy, about Lily, about Lucy and Lily, Lily and Lucy, about four saints in three acts.

To anticipated shouts of protest; and, worse, the explanation is that the above paragraph might have been written, but wasn't, by Miss Gertrude Stein herself, as an unusually lucid explanation of the fact that she has completed—and it will be staged—an operatic novelty entitled "Four Saints in Three Acts."

The lyrics are tremendous. The music embellishing them is by Virgil Thomson. The settings will be in pink cellophane clouds, with an all-Negro cast. The opera will be presented at Hartford, Conn., as a part of the inaugural of the Avery Memorial.

Thomson explained today the reason for the choice of Negroes to perform the work. It is not their splendid voices, although that might be desideratum. It is because "they have no intellectual objections to batter down. * * * There has never been a smile or a titter while they have been rehearsing the words of the poems."

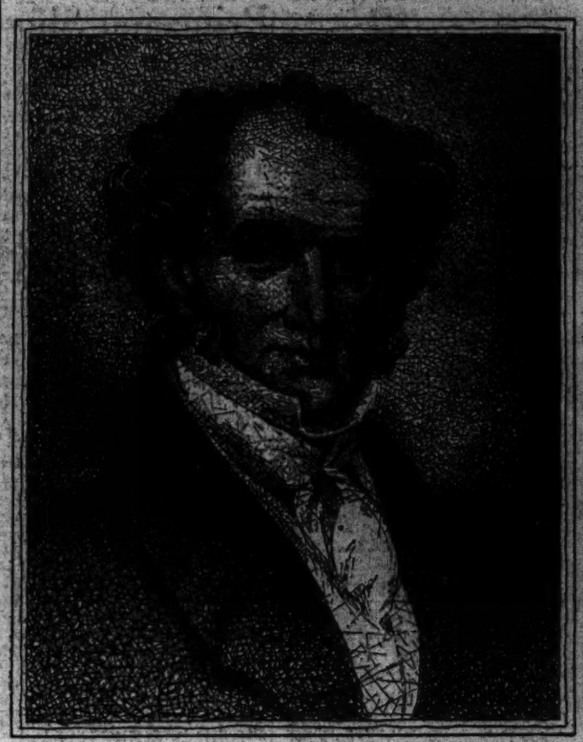
One of the striking lyrics, chosen at random:

Act 1: "Saint Therese in a storm at Avila there can be rain and warm snow and warm that is the water is warm the river is not warm the sun is not warm and if to stay to cry."

Thomson considers the music the best he has ever done. You must not ask about plot, for there is none.

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Martin Van Buren—Hannah Hoes



Martin Van Buren and Hannah Hoes met in the little town of Kinderhook on the Hudson many years ago, and it was in the quaint Dutch village that their romance bloomed. They were great lovers, and a happy and contented married pair. But Hannah died 18 years before her country paid her husband the supreme honor of making him President of the United States. The woman who shared his quiet life with him in the home town was not there to share his success.

There is a quaint little village on the Hudson River in New York State—Kinderhook by name—which once gave a President to the United States—Martin Van Buren. It is not very far as the crow flies from Hyde Park, N. Y., where the present President has his summer home.

In character and temperament Kinderhook has remained typically Dutch in tradition. Of course, invasion from the metropolis and spacious summer homes nowadays have contributed to the passing of much of its individuality. But the years pass slowly in Kinderhook and memories still linger there of Martin Van Buren and Hannah Hoes and their courtship and romance that endeared them to the good people of the town.

There was everything in the scenery round about Kinderhook to stimulate romance. The classic Hudson gave variety to the scenery and magnificent views were to be had for the mere asking of them. This river, which has been so fittingly called "a river of mystery as well as of history," has seen three men, intimately associated with its banks and valleys, through birth or habitation, ascend to the Presidency of the United States, Martin Van Buren, Theodore Roosevelt and Franklin Delano Roosevelt—all of Dutch ancestry. The list of notable sons of the Hudson River is a long and honorable one, adding to its lore and its importance at one and the same time.

The year is 1782 and in the family of a Revolutionary patriot, Van Buren who shouldered his musket and left his plow, like Cincinnatus of old, when his country called in '76—has known a great joy on December 5, St. Nicholas' Day, in the birth of his first-born son. To his Dutch heart, that was one of the dearest days of all the year, the one that saw the opening of the gala Christmas season which was to last through New Year's Day.

The neighbors from far and near came to see the new born child and to bring him simple gifts of St. Nicholas and letter cakes, warm woolen garments and quaint bibs. Among the visitors was one Vrouw Hoes, a warm friend of Mrs. Van Buren whose own hour of travail, was drawing nearer and nearer. Little did those Dutch matrons, that new mother and the mother that was to be, dream of the link that would be forged between their lives through their children.

The months went by. Early in 1783 good Vrouw Hoes was delivered of a child—a girl, with Vrouw Van Buren an attendant during the event. Through their baby days and their childhood days little Martin and Hannah Hoes were the closest of chums. Side by side, they sat in the village school and lisped their letters and stumbled over their reading lessons together. Blue-eyed Hannah thought only of Martin and to that lad the flaxen plaits of Hannah were as beauteous as a queen's diadem.

As they grew older, Martin went to the Boys Academy. He would finish his tasks in his father's tavern, by rising early and taking Hannah to her school before he went on to the Academy. And, together after the long school day of the period over, they would walk home past the steepled church, past the neat little shops with sanded floors, the village green where garlanded booths were set up each year for the Kermis. On holidays they skated or coasted their cheks red with the frost and in the mellow summer they played together still while in the autumn nut hunts and other sports held their common interest.

When Martin was fourteen, the children were separated. He was articled to a lawyer and began the study of the law until he mastered the ways of a broom to keep his master's floor clean.

Little Hannah was studying hard, too, and she learned to bake. Many a tasty cookie she slipped into Martin's cold hand when they met out of doors. And she must have been a proud unit of that country audience which heard the future President argue his first law case at fifteen. He was so small that he had to stand upon a chair so the court could see him as he spoke.

Martin Van Buren reached his nineteenth year and fortune smiled on him at last. A lawyer from New York heard him in court and thought so highly of his ability that he took him into his own office to finish his law course.

We may be sure that the mail of the day carried many epistles from Martin to Hannah in old Kinderhook. The gay New York belles, no doubt, tried to ensnare his affections. But in vain. The heart of Martin Van Buren was in the highlands of the Hudson with Hannah Hoes.

The courtship grew as Martin rose in power and political influence. By 1807, he was a successful lawyer, a leader of county politics at twenty-five years of age. Surely now his prudent Dutch soul could see the way clear for matrimony.

The record has been lost or perhaps was never written of how Martin Van Buren proposed to Hannah Hoes. Perhaps he stammered and stuttered and could not find fitting words for the great question. But her woman's wit must have stood Hannah in good stead for she answered "Yes."

On a cold February morning in 1807, Martin Van Buren drove up in a sleight to the Hoes homestead. Hannah and her friends were ready and he tucked her away in the sleigh and drove gaily, to the music of sleigh bells, to Catskill, a neighboring village, where they were married.

Shortly after their marriage they set up home-making in Hudson City, where four sons, one of them the "Prince John" of Van Buren's White House days, were born.

Those were happy days in the Hudson City home. In after years Van Buren was to live at the White House and in his own palatial residence, Lindenwald, long a landmark of Kinderhook. There Washington Irving lived for a time and drew several of his characters from the neighborhood. The most notable of these characterizations was that of Ichabod Crane, whom he modeled on Jesse Merwin, the schoolmaster of Kinderhook.

But in neither of these unusual homes could Martin Van Buren have been happier than he was in the Hudson City home. After a time, though, a cloud crept across the blue sky. It was the shadow of a consumptive's death that hung over Hannah Hoes Van Buren. For a time she lingered and then, shortly, after their removal to Albany, where Mr. Van Buren had still greater advantages open in his profession, she died.

Thus death deprived her of the opportunity the years would have brought to her to become one of the White House chatelaines. The fact that Van Buren was a widower and had, therefore, no feminine relations to snub "Peggy Eaton," is said to have won him favor with President Andrew Jackson and caused him to throw the weight of his influence on the side of Van Buren's Presidential ambitions.

But Martin Van Buren would gladly have given up all thought of the White House, for an hour again with his beloved Hannah. He remained a widower the rest of his life. Seventeen years after her death he became President. His hopes now were centered on his son, the "Prince John" of his administration, a popular beau of the day. There were many rumors of his marriage plans, but these died away. With the coming of Mrs. Abram Van Buren, formerly the lovely Angelica Singleton, to be her father-in-law's hostess, the White House was socially active again. She ruled over the Executive Mansion with grace and distinction and in the manner that would have pleased Hannah Hoes Van Buren, had fortune spared her from her early death.

What's in Fashion?

Lapin and Mink Jackets, Scarfs and Other Fur Fashions Make a Girl Happy If She Finds Them on Her Christmas Tree

Directed by Amos Parrish

New York, Dec. 18.—Lucky folk who can swagger about in new furs next week saying, "Yes, a Christmas present." That's real swank for you . . . giving furs for Christmas. And the fact that a full-length coat of fur may stretch the budget too far needn't cross furs off the list. There are many other fur fashions this year.

Jackets are a good one. The younger girl likes them especially. They give her more freedom than a full-length coat. The older woman finds them smart, too, particularly to wear with her longer-length afternoon dresses which hang below a full-length coat.

Smart Capelets.

Then there are little capelets which are very smart over an unfurred suit or coat. Here again the fur determines the price, with lapin, astrakhan and mink still favorites.

These fasten up close to the throat with a bow or Ascot tie scarf (as does the one illustrated) and are very cozy for a not-too-chilly day.

A muff is another gift most any women or girl would like. Provided it matches the fur of her fur coat, jacket or capelet or the fur-trimming on her cloth coat. A duet of jacket or capelet and muff would be a most elegant gift.

This year muffs range from tiny, just-big-enough-for-the-fingers size to gorgeously fluffy affairs of silver fox skins. But medium sizes are the best to choose if the recipient of your gift hasn't expressed a choice.

Fur Scarfs.

You can't go amiss, either, if your gift is one of a fur scarf, caracul, galyak, kid or lapin. These are usually slit on one side so the other end may be pulled through and the scarf fitted snugly around the throat. Or they can be worn in simple Ascot tie fashion with one end thrown over the other.

This, incidentally, is a gift which can be worn right into spring with the spring coat or suit.

Hats of fur. There's an idea. Not an explorer's coonskin cap, of course. But a swank little tip-tilted turban or beret of astrakhan or galyak, or of antelope combined with fur.

To be sure, this would be a bit dangerous for anyone to choose for anyone else. But give her a check with the stipulation it is to be used for the fur hat.

For Evening.

If her evening social schedule is heavy, she'll love a fur evening wrap. Make it a full-length one of ermine or mink . . . if you can. But if not we'll guarantee she'll get a thrill from a jacket in bolero, waist or fingertip length (one is sketched), or a short cape, of white bunny (which simulates ermine), lapin, squirrel, real ermine, mink or chinchilla.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Bringing a Backward Law Up to Date.

The period was that of the Columbian Exposition in 1893. There was a parade of the States, each State delegation being led by its Governor. The Governors were adorned with silk hats and gloves, and their brilliantly attired staffs served them as aids. They were acclaimed by the multitudes.

The Governor of Connecticut had provided himself with a wooden nutmeg, as may have been the habit of Governors of that State in that day. Whenever the applause for Connecticut and the Governor of that sovereign State was loud enough to call for attention the Governor, instead of bowing and removing his hat, would take his wooden nutmeg from his vest pocket and hold it aloft. This always brought a second round of applause.

It appeared as though the Governor was not ashamed of but was somewhat proud of the reputation which the wooden nutmeg connoted.

It was not long until the chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, Dr. H. W. Wiley, artful manipulator of public opinion, persuaded Congress to pass what is commonly known as the food and drug act. In later years Congress extended the principles of this law by passing other laws creating a Federal Trade Commission and giving it no small amount of police power. The object of both measures was to put the wooden nutmeg out of business. The two together have accomplished the purpose reasonably well.

Governors no longer boast of wooden nutmegs, signifying that while the business has not "ceased and desisted," to quote a favorite phrase of the law, it has driven what remains of it under cover.

The food and drug law had a few features that served to protect the public health. However, such as it had were far less protective than the people thought, and the great battles around the law, by hamstringing some of these features, made it still more of a stuffed shirt. At best it was no more than the best protective measure that could be passed in its day.

The Congress which assembles on the first of next January is being asked to pass a real protective law, in so far as health is concerned. The old law was primarily directed against cheating. Its central theme was the two commandments, thou shalt not steal and thou shalt not lie—that is, in certain business relations.

This proposed law has as its central theme, thou shalt not harm thy neighbor's health or life in order to get his money. It requires that when a mixture contains harmful drugs or habit forming drugs the name of the drug shall be printed on the label. It requires that all of the advertising shall be truthful, instead of limiting this requirement to the label, as the old law did.

And, finally, when a man or corporation is poisoning the people for his own gain it lessens the requirements for proof. Under the present law, when a drug blinds the man who purchased it, the injured party or the injured government is required to show intent to injure. The new law requires that the proof go no further than injury, the qualities that make for injury, and the responsibility of the man who originated the injury. That provision is fair to the consuming public.

Bringing Up Father.

K. B. writes: My father runs a high blood pressure. It is about 175. He is 42 years old. Sometimes he has violent fits of temper and afterward he must lie down and rest. Very often he has splitting headaches and complains of drowsiness. He likes to eat lots of meat and salt, which I know is bad for him.

Reply.

Your job is to control father.

Dried Vegetables for Soup Come in Neat Little Cubes.

The Marketer slopped along the street—she cast a rueful glance at her shoes. Were they shiny once? Rainy weather is all right, but not when one has forgotten one's overshoes.

She opened the door of a tiny shop, stepped inside, walked up to the counter. The first thing that attracted her eye was a little package filled with bright colored bits of dried something-or-other.

"What's this?" she asked the store lady.

"Those are soup vegetables. Some people don't like to take the trouble to prepare all the different kinds of vegetables for soup, so here they are in dried form. You cook them a little while, and add them to the meat broth and your soup is made. The dried vegetables contain all the minerals and oils of the fresh vegetables."

"And only 10 cents a package," murmured the Marketer.

"Here's something interesting—a yeast extract to be added to soup," continued the lady. "It's rich in vitamin B, and a little 55-cent can goes a long way. It comes in paste and powder form."

The marketer wandered around the shop. Here's news!

A honey-fig spread—she has found honey butter, and a honey apricot spread, and this last for only 30 cents is a real delicacy. What dainty sandwiches could be made with it!

Another delicious preparation for sandwich fillings is a meal of ground pecans and cashew nuts. The nuts are ground very fine, and can be used made into a paste for sandwiches, or sprinkled over cereal. There are 40 and 70 cent cans in this little shop.

For those people who prefer unsalted nuts, you can get cashews at 20 cents for ½ pound package and hazel nuts for 33 cents.

Oh, here's just the thing to put in the top of a tiny stocking! A pert little man, made of maple sugar, for 10 cents. If there are many tiny stockings to fill, it might be wise to get a group of these men so that no childish sweet tooth will be unsatisfied on Christmas morning.

On tonight's menu will be found cold lamb, sliced from Sunday's roast.

Einstein Master Of Music, Says English Pianist

Harriett Cohen Rehearses for Benefit Concert With Physicist.

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Albert Einstein as a violinist may seem an anomaly to some, but not to Harriett Cohen, the English pianist.

"I shall never forget the first time I met Prof. Einstein," says Miss Cohen. "It was at his home in Germany.

"He took me into his work room, and there in a window was his telescope. It got me—I can't exactly explain why, excepting that it was a little like finding Pablo Casal's cello lying in a corner.

"Prof. Einstein is no dilettante, either," Miss Cohen went on. "Naturally, he is too busy to practice much, and sometimes his tone is a little thin, or perhaps he plays a wrong note.

"But he never mistakes the musical intent of the composer. I know of no one who has a better conception of the 'line' of a composition than he, especially of Bach. When we play together we never have to stop and argue out passages; he is always right. One almost could call him infallible."

One of the things Miss Cohen is getting most pleasure from in her present tour of this country is the prospect of playing next month with Einstein at the recently postponed concert for the relief of Hitler exiles. As a matter of fact, Einstein just had left Miss Cohen's apartment after a rehearsal.

"Imagine such a mind and such a man taking time to come here to rehearse. I wish I could describe the impression he makes on one—the complete simplicity, honesty and lack of all envy and malice. The ordinary bickering of humankind literally does not touch him."

Clarksburg, W. Va., Dec. 17 (spl.). Every county in West Virginia and the entire Appalachian region, as well, are to be searched for plant specimens for the herbarium at Wst Virginia University. An elaborate botanical survey to that end has been launched under the direction of its curator, Prof. E. L. Core.

For the purpose of collecting and forwarding the specimens, one person is to be engaged in each of the 55 counties of the State, while similar agents will be engaged in various parts of the Appalachian region.

Liver in Mexican Style Makes Appetizing Meal

There comes a time when every homemaker reaches the "end of the rope" in preparing dishes which are new and different, so here is a new recipe for liver which may come in handy. Liver in Mexican style:

1½ pounds beef or pork liver
2 tablespoons bacon drippings
1 small onion, sliced
2 cups tomatoes
1 green pepper, chopped
½ cup peas, cooked
½ cup corn, cooked
¾ cup rice, cooked
Salt and pepper
Flour

Cut the liver into slices, then into strips and dredge with flour seasoned with salt and pepper. Brown the liver with onion and green pepper in the bacon drippings, add the tomatoes, cover and simmer until the liver is tender, about one hour. Add the rice, corn, and peas and continue to cook until the mixture is thoroughly heated. Serve inside a ring of rice or spaghetti.

Iron Monster Runs Up Those Runs in a Jiffy

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Hosiery with runs—the bane of rich and poor alike. Time was when a broken thread in a pair of hose meant a pair of hose for the waste basket. But now in this age when giant, purring machines are more adept than human fingers, mending is a mere trifle. One thread or ten is a matter of a moment to replace. Stockings, unsightly, ragged affairs, enter the mouth of an iron monster. A whirl of wheels, the steady tick-tick of a steel needle, and stockings as good as new emerge from the other end.

This expert mending is done by a company which specializes in this kind of work. Not only is hosiery repaired, but gloves cleaned, mended, and even made on special order. The horrid holes which lie in the wake of moths, the sad trace of a live cigarette ash on frock or suit alike are fixed here by "in-weaving."

Garter belts which do other things than hold stockings trimly and neatly in place are keeping the girls behind the counter in a downtown store busy. The 14-inch width of these little favorites takes the place of a girdle on people who aren't girdle conscious. They have that two-way stretch which adapts them to the form, be it short and fat, or tall and thin. And they're soft and flexible enough to be comfortable.

The fast approach of Christmas and District repeal are responsible for an interesting table display in an F street shop. A long table covered with a red and silver cloth boasts no less than ten drinking sets.

A long, tall chromium shaker with a black wood handle stands on a silver tray surrounded by eight slender-stemmed goblets. A silver-plated barrel on an oblong tray has six gold-lined cups looking forlornly empty. The ruby red of a lovely silver encrusted wine bottle is matched in the red and silver glasses accompanying it.

From cocktail shakers in severely modernistic design, to old English wine bottles, lavishly decorated, the display is complete in its appeal to all tastes and thirsts.

Proof that cottage cheese has more to recommend it than mere food value lies in a small box containing cottage cheese powder put up by a new cosmetics company. The cheese is taken in a dry, concentrated form and blended with flour essentials to form a smooth, fragrant powder. Because of the milk base it's very good for use on undernourished skins.

Little Miss Pokey Anne is going to have a hand in a lot of bridge these holidays. She's the young lady in a poker-dot dress and great big poker-dot hat whose picture decorates the playing cards on sale in a large department store.

It's easy to see by just looking at her she represents real "quality." The cards have a flexibility that insures them against long and hard usage. The gold rim has little significance in itself, but is a finishing touch that marks Miss Pokey Anne's background as being decidedly above the average.

A cosmetic company which has been waging earnest war on dry skins has found a unique means of remedying them. From the oil taken from the pit of a peach they have manufactured a cleansing cream. When this is applied to the skin it supplies the essential oils which the glands are not providing. As a consequence a parchment skin soon loses its brittle look and becomes soft and smooth.

The hand-painted silk crepe scarfs which drape the counter of an F street store would be several times more attractive peeping out beneath the collar of our coats. They come in so many different combinations of colors that any single one of them would match everything in our wardrobe.

Whoever painted them must have taken up her brush with an attitude of rivalry of the aurora borealis.

In this day and time when women wear their hair strikingly away from their faces, the hairline assumes a greater importance than ever before. It is the frame of the face, the starting point of beauty, and should for that reason be carefully looked after. When there is a noticeable tendency for the hair around the face to break off or recede it means the danger signal has struck and that measures must be taken to cultivate a healthy head of hair.

A group of scalp specialists have two pomades which are excellent for this kind of treatment. A light pomade is neutral and oderless, a dark has a pine fragrance. When rubbed on the temples or incipient bald spots either will do wonders in a short time.

Song—and Wine.

By KATHERINE SMITH.

Though I have sung to other ears
Than yours and heard another's song;
Though I have tasted sweeter wine
Than that you bring me, take along
With you the tune's bright impulse flung
From lip to waiting ear, and bring
To me the bitterness of dregs
Of wine, if I no longer sing.

Frilly Capes and Jackets Ring a Host of Magic Changes.

The fashionable young woman who is dashing out of town for a week's round of gayeties may take along only one evening gown and still be well dressed at every formal function. Yes, there's a trick in it. The magic lies in a collection of frilly little capelets and infinitesimal jackets.

The gown, of course, should be black velvet, and should rely upon skillfulness of cut and beauty of material for a striking appearance.

The capelets and jackets may be of tulle, ostrich, lame, sequins, or fur.

A pink cloud of ostrich resting upon the shoulder of a black velvet gown is delightfully frivolous and utterly feminine. Black ostrich makes a sophisticated capelet with several rows of flat curls arranged in a collar about the neck and a full fringe of black flues below.

Since tawny shades are outstanding among the favored midseason colors, a tulle capelet in burnt orange is an exciting companion for the black velvet formal gown. The tulle may be pleated vertically to make the capelet's body, while a fluffy Pierrot ruche finishes the neck.

As a decided contrast to the diaphanous ostrich and tulle affairs, is a glittering silver lame jacket, fashioned on fitted lines with tailored collar and revers. The sleeves are long, plain and tight.

Sequins also make sparkling jackets but it is impossible to make them conform to fitted lines. For that reason most women prefer the spangles in capelet versions.

Fainting Damsels Found Scarce Today

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Girls who enter college today are far healthier than those of 10 years ago, according to Dr. Gulielma Alsop, resident physician of Barnard College.

The present-day college girls, Dr. Alsop said, do not faint, never have headaches, do not burst into tears, and a good portion of them can be rated medically as in very good health. Medical examination of the freshman class at Barnard showed one-third to be in excellent health and 5 per cent in "very perfect" health.

"The common cold is our biggest health hazard in college," Dr. Alsop asserted. Young people are more susceptible to colds than older persons, and some college girls are found to be cold carriers.

"They are treated with much fresh air, natural and artificial sunlight, and cod liver oil. Anemia is the second greatest health trouble of the college girl, though there is much less of it than in the days of fainting damsels."

Washington Arts Club Plans Annual Exhibit

A tea Sunday afternoon at the Arts Club of Washington will open the annual exhibit of members working in all mediums. The exhibit is expected to be a truly representative showing of oils, drawings, water colors, etchings and sculptures.

On Tuesday, December 19, Clarence A Phillips, of the Carnegie Foundation, will talk on "Glimpses of Europe," with colored slide illustrations. Mrs. Elizabeth Northrop and Mrs. Carl Casey will be hostesses.

Fir Tree Most Adoptable for Christmas Use

Compact Symmetry of Fir More Attractive Than Other Trees.

Soon the markets will be loaded up with Christmas greens, shipped in for the holiday season from all over the country. There was a time when trees were cut indiscriminately all along the roadsides, and the country suffered considerable loss. Now they are systematically grown and cut, shipped to the markets, and sold—hundreds of thousands of them—to brighten the homes during the festive season.

Fir trees are the most attractive trees for Christmas decoration because they are compact and symmetrical. Spruce is more common but somewhat stiff. Red cedars are soft and lovely, but the limbs are pliable and less able to stand the weight of Santa's generosity than some of the other trees.

Hemlock, with its dark foliage and graceful drooping branches, is the most beautiful of all the Christmas trees. However, the needles have a tendency to drop. If the stem is recut and put in water as soon as possible, the needles will remain longer.

These evergreens are lovely as general decorations. Southern smilax, mountain-laurel, ground-pine are suitable for ropes for trimming.

Holly sprays are perhaps the most effective trimmings, both because of their legendary association and their own natural beauty. Holly should be used in rather large masses, as thin sprinklings all over a house clutter up the interior scenery. Better to have one or two thick bunches in a room than several smattering ones.

Jazz Czar Polishes His Baton For White House Harmony

And He Gets Out All His Finest Syncopated Airs, Too, for a Night of New Year's Frolic at the White House Ball.

Meyer Davis, newspaper reporter, who became a jazz band czar, has been given the job of furnishing harmony for a New Year's Eve party at the White House. It is the fourth White House ball for which he has made music.

The syncopator to Presidents said yesterday that the tempo of these parties reflects somewhat the Administrations themselves.

Back in 1913 he took an orchestra to play for President and Mrs. Wilson and distinguished guests. It was an innovation. Previously, the Marine Band had played for White House dances.

"We gave them something that time," he said. "In those days Strauss waltzes and Sousa marches were popular dance melodies. But syncopation was just entering the musical scene. We played 'Alexander's Ragtime Band.' They liked it."

Another tune to which the distinguished guests tripped a light, but sedate toe, was "Everybody's Doing It."

His next appearance was at a ball given by President and Mrs. Harding in the first year of their White House reign. Davis remembers that as the gayest party he ever played for in the Chief Executive's Washington Home.

The First man and lady of the land were genial, affable hosts, he said. Their favorite tunes were "La Paloma" and "The End of a Perfect Day."

Next came the dance Mr. and Mrs. Hoover gave for their son.

One incident of the affair Davis won't forget. The President and Mrs. Hoover had retired early, he said, but one of the executive's aids stayed on, and he took his duties seriously.

At 10 minutes to 1—White House balls end at that hour—the aid approached Davis with a watch.

"The music will stop at 1 o'clock," the aid informed Davis.

"It is the usual thing to play a little beyond the deadline," Davis explained, "but the aid was inflexible."

He took a strategic position before the orchestra, Davis said, and recorded the passage of time by holding his fingers in the air.

The ball ended, at 1 o'clock in the morning, Eastern standard time.

Davis has not determined what melodies he will offer when he plays at the New Year's Eve dance President and Mrs. Roosevelt will give in honor of three of their children. He hasn't learned their preferences.

He might, however, render "Three Little Pigs," he said, in recognition of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and his Department's hog-marketing program.

Poor Mothers Made Eligible for Camp

Bear Mountain Camp Will Extend Family Aid.

New York, Dec. 16 (AP).—Admission to Camp Tera, the camp for unemployed women established at the suggestion of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Secretary Frances Perkins, will be extended to mothers of families in the low income group.

The extension was ordered, it was announced last night because the camp's governing body believed many women with homes needed a vacation from their difficulties or could profit by the camp's opportunities. Heretofore only homeless, unemployed women were admitted.

Since the camp, at Bear Mountain on the Hudson, opened three lodges for the winter, there have been about 100 women guests.

Washington Women in Welfare Work

Mrs. Ford Headed Society Which First Indorsed Community Chest.

The Travelers Aid Society was the first member agency of the Council of Social Agencies to officially indorse the organization of a Community Chest in Washington. The executive secretary of the Travelers Aid, Mrs. Margaret Ford, was instrumental in bringing about this indorsement, because of her knowledge of Chest acquired through many years in the social work field.

Mrs. Ford, a graduate of the Chicago School of Social Work, has spent 20 years in this field. For five years she was affiliated with family societies, for four years with children's work, two years State director of the social hygiene program with the United States Government, and for three years executive of the State welfare program in Arkansas. She has been for six years executive secretary of the Travelers Aid Society in Washington, is a member of the Council of Social Agencies, and a trustee of the Community Chest.

"I believe in the Community Chest," Mrs. Ford said, "because it relieves board and staff members of financial worries and gives them an opportunity to devote all their time to the social work with which they are charged. Through the cooperation of the Council of Social Agencies and Community Chest, the Social Work organizations are brought closer together and are enabled to carry out centralized programs which save money for the community and hardships for the clients who are forced to call on these organizations for help.

"The combination of Council and Chest assures the success of social work in any city."

Stars Choose Royal Raiment For Holidays

Return of Restaurant Life, With Repeal, Brings Lavish Vogue.

Cinema queens are preparing to greet the holiday season in royal raiment, and furs, velvets and jewels will come into their own in a sumptuous pageant of luxurious apparel.

One reason for this is the fact that repeal will bring back the sparkling restaurant life which has been unknown for almost a decade and a half. The other is the ever-increasing vogue for rich materials and jeweled adornments.

Dolores Del Rio, beautiful Spanish star, has selected a gown of dull-surfaced velvet in a wine red. It moulds the figure tightly but flares below the knees into a graceful train. A wide velvet band of the same shade encircles the shoulders like a scarf and is fastened in a low decolletage in front with a ruby and diamond clip. She will wear an ermine cape and a clip to match the one on her gown will nestle in the coils of her dark hair.

Black velvet is the choice of blonde Ann Harding. The sheath-like model is broken with long, classical drapes that fall from the shoulders to the hem line. Primly high in front, the bodice dips to a low square decolletage in the back and a single gardenia finishes off the deep V. An evening wrap of black velvet with a flower collar and wide bands of white fox complete the ravishing ensemble.

Irene Dunne will be resplendent in a gown of gold lame that clings to the body in a shimmering sheath. Her jewels will be dull gold bracelets set in clusters of pearls and a pendant of the same design will be suspended about her throat on a thin gold chain. A burnoose type wrap in turquoise satin trimmed in white fox will be worn with this gown.

What Today Means

"Sagittarius"

If December 18 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 7:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 2 to 3 p. m. and from 5:45 to 6:50 p. m. The danger periods are from 10 to 11 a. m. from 7:15 to 8:45 p. m. and from 10 to 10:20 p. m.

Don't overestimate your ability on this date as you will be much inclined to do. People generally will be inclined to think far too well of themselves and as a result will probably let themselves in for a good bit of trouble, to say nothing of considerable embarassment. Children will be quite dramatic on this day and if not busy dramatizing themselves in some way or another will look for every opportunity to show off. Your little one will recite its "party piece" with unusual success.

The child born on this December 18 will be a self-conscious little one who is not at all at ease in the presence of company. Its many talents will not function under the gaze of others; not the kind of a child a parent points to and shows off with pride. You'll get results from this little one, though, in the long run.

Born on December 18, you have little to fear in this life, for you are equipped with a good average body and a mind that will see you through any and all of your difficulties. You will probably never make anyone's hair stand up on end with amazement, but you WILL get there in the long run and that is what counts anyway. You are conservative in all that you do, but you do not let yourself be too greatly bound by custom and old-fashioned ideas. You are probably not a big person in any sense of the word, but there is nothing petty about you. You might be summed up as an average person in every way. You have your faults but at the same time you have your good points and they are in fair balance.

If December 18 is the date of your birth, life will be a steady, sometimes very slow, pull for you. More than likely you will start from small beginnings and humble surroundings, and will rise above them. Money will be plentiful in your life but you will more than likely have no great excess of it over and above what you need to meet your daily requirements. You will marry when the right person comes along and you will take it as a matter of course, no fuss and flurry. Your successes as you go along will be more than your failures.

Successful people born on December 18:

Arthur Heinze, capitalist.

Albert C. Perkins, educator.

Frederick G. Gleason, composer.

Fez-Wearing Wrestler Mistaken for Santa

Bristol, Va., Dec. 17 (Spl.).—Soulemein Bey, Turkish wrestler who wears a red fez on the street, yesterday afternoon on Moore street was clasped around the legs by a little girl who cried exultantly, "Santa Claus, Santa Claus!"

The child's mother was embarrassed, but Bey patted the youngster on the head, smiled and walked on. The wrestler has been making his headquarters here for the past three weeks.

Initialled Handkerchiefs.

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—A man-sized handkerchiefs with three huge colored block initials extending entirely across the linen square from edge to edge are just about the most novel and daring of new sport hankies to make a last-minute dramatic Christmas entrance. They are startlingly different, and there's no doubt about it, they definitely label the handkerchief as the owner's own.

She Catches Her Notables High Up Above the Clouds

Helen Waterhouse Spends Her Life in the Air Looking for Interviews; and Many of the Great Have Consented to Talk to Her.

By Elizabeth Young.

Helen Waterhouse is a girl reporter who just flies around, snatching stories out of the air. Hers sounds like an easy occupation, but it has its up and downs.

In fact, the ups have taken her to such high altitudes that she has been deaf for a day in consequence. And her downs have been precipitate and proportionate, as the time her Chicago-bound plane struck a storm.

And is she afraid? Well, not since the first time she went into the air to get a story.

It was shortly after Commander Byrd's Antarctic flight, and her paper in Akron, Ohio, assigned her to interview Alton Parker, co-pilot on the expedition.

"I was scared stiff," Miss Waterhouse told a Post reporter yesterday, as she perched on a chair arm at the Hamilton Hotel, waiting for traffic conditions to clear in the upper strata.

"Parker was a great stunt flyer, came to the Lighter-Than-Air Capital of the United States—as all famous flyers eventually do—and I was alleged aviation reporter. I determined to act completely sophisticated, and as we took off, I sat at his side, making notes of everything he said.

"I don't know just when I stopped, but it was probaby when he went into his stunts. He treated me to them all, the barrel roll, the outside loop, zooming, everything. When we came down, I found myself clinging desperately to his knee.

"We went to lunch right afterward to continue the interview, and in my excitement I ordered four or five desserts, including cream puffs, and no main course at all. I think you might say I won my spurs on that trip. I've never been afraid since.

"The secret of not being afraid is having confidence in the pilot. And that ought to be easy, when you realize he doesn't want to die any more than you do. Besides, only first-class pilots have jobs these days, with so many looking for jobs.

"The highest I ever went up in the air in search of a story was a month ago, when I came to Washington to interview Mrs. Roosevelt about rumors that she planned to fly her own plane. When we landed, I seemed to be stone-deaf in one ear at least. I was about to consult a doctor for my affliction, when the pilot told me we had flown unusually high, and that the effect would wear off in a day or so. That was Sunday night, and before the time of the interview on Tuesday morning at 10:45, my hearing had fortunately returned.

"Mrs. Roosevelt is a delightful person to interview. She received me in her room and answered my questions quite candidly. She even told me what the President had said, after she had passed the physical examination for flying.

"About that time I flew into the storm? Well, they were opening a new air line between Cleveland and Chicago and I was sent to get the story. Just outside Toledo, and at night, we ran into the most frightful storm, the same in which Knute Rockne was killed.

"Looking out the windows, we couldn't see a thing except the lightning bolts coming nearer and nearer and the rain pouring against the plane. I marveled at the coolness of the pilot. Suddenly the plane seemed swept off its course. That was an experience! But the pilot was in control, not the storm. He was turning around and heading back for Toledo. We came down safe and sound, and didn't go on until next day.

Night Flying Fine.

"Night flying is the best form of travel there is. I advise every one to fly by night. Atmospheric conditions are smoother—I don't know why; I never thought to ask—and in general the trip is more soothing and restful.

"And I feel, with Mrs. Roosevelt, that air travel is no more hazardous than any other. In fact, I think it may even be safer. Before any line sends a pilot out, everything is checked ahead, weather maps are drawn. Take today, for instance. It certainly looks mild enough to me," said Miss Waterhouse, drawing aside the curtains of her window to survey for the nth time the state of the elements.

"But no. The 12 o'clock plane I was supposed to take is being held up because of low ceiling. They tell me ice was freezing on the wings this morning, too. That's what causes most of the crashes. When they tell me I can go, I'll feel perfectly safe in going. But if they hold off too long, I guess I'll have to risk my life on a train."

Miss Waterhouse was in Washington overnight, in transit from New York City to her home in Akron. Her next big "air assignment" takes her to Chicago where she will get the inside story on the lives of the hostesses and stewardesses on the United Air Lines, who will be assembled in convention there.

"I ought to get some swell stories on how they handle unruly passengers," she said. "All the hostesses are trained nurses, you know. One of them told me an exciting incident of how she took charge of an intoxicated gentleman who managed to slip into her plane unnoticed. Intoxicated persons are barred from flight, you know. He was creating a bit of uncomfortable disturbance, so she coaxed him to have a cup of coffee. He consented and soon quieted down. The trip continued in peace.

She's Air Minded.

Miss Waterhouse is a Bostonian by birth and an Ohioan by preference, who did her first newspaper work as a suburban reporter for the Springfield Republican at Amhurst, Mass. It was her flight with Alton Parker that made her air-minded and established her definitely as a "flying reporter."

Today she is a free-lance writer, dealing exclusively with aviation activities and personalities. Beginning with the arrival of the Graf Zeppelin in this country in 1928, she has covered most of the big events in aviation, both national and international, and knows most of the important figures in aviation—with the exception of the Lindberghs—by their first names.

"Air-minded people are the friendliest people on earth," Miss Waterhouse said. "They seem to constitute a great brotherhood. Everybody knows everybody else, and if you know them once, you know them always. They seem to have two things in common: love of adventure and a pioneering spirit."

Miami Bathers Don Silk and Alpaca Suits

Miami Beach, Fla., Dec. 17 (AP).—Stylists have brought out their latest beach designs—silk and alpaca bathing suits—coincident with the opening of the winter season at this fashionable resort center.

Because of their snug fit and ability to shed water, silk suits will be much in demand, designers predict, as will the softly lined alpaca creations. Gingham suits also are being shown.

Two-piece bathing suits are more popular here this winter than ever before, with shorts being worn either with kerchiefs or tights. One striking creation seen on the beach was of black tailored shorts with a white stripe on either side, worn over white tights that contained a sprinkling of bold, black dots.

Many of the one-piece suits have corded adjustable straps, which may be worn in different positions to insure an even sun tan.

Slacks, shorts, pajamas, coats, or skirts may be adopted, according to their suitability for the wearer. Skirts, however, promise to be the most popular.

Some smart shops are showing transparent ensembles with stripes colored to match the bathing suit. They have three-quarter length coats with raglan sleeves.

Navy and white gabardine slacks with bellhop jackets also are being worn.

Pajamas will be worn only by those who use them for comfort. Coats, like shorts, are particularly good. Those of fancy knitted material are proving popular.

Chicago Civic Opera Revived

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—For the first time since the utilities empire of Samuel Insull crumpled under the weight of the depression and Edith Rockefeller McCormick lost her vast fortune, Chicago will have civic opera when the newly organized Chicago Grand Opera Company begins its five-week season at the Civic Opera House on December 26.

The backers plan a gala season, with society turning out to hear once more such stars as Rosa Raisa and Edith Mason, old-time favorites; Maria Jeritza, Schipa and Chamlee in the pink and gold setting which saw only three years of opera.

America Leads the World In Verse, Says Capital Poet

Mrs. Crounse Sure Finance Has Not Stiffled Native Inspiration.

America's progress in poetry has been as remarkable as her accomplishments in science and invention, in the opinion of a Washington society matron whose first book of verse has just appeared.

"People think we have allowed commerce and finance to absorb us completely in this country," said Mrs. William Livingston Crounse, author of "Fold of Dreams." "But as a matter of fact, we have produced the world's outstanding figures in poetry in this decade.

"Today's poetry is not of the classic sort. But it has its own rich distinctive quality. Europe has nothing more appealing to offer than the verses of Elinor Wylie of Washington, Robert Frost, Amy Lowell, Edna Saint Vincent Millay, Lizette Woodward Reese, Stephen Benet, Robinson Jeffers and Edwin Arlington Robinson."

"Emily Dickinson of a hundred years ago stands out because of her keen, whimsical and unusual brilliancy. She and Walt Whitman were the pioneers in the new poetical freedom that has made so much progress during the last fifty years or so."

Mrs. Crounse aside from being a promising poet, is a talented pianist and an artist, and a figure in the Capital's social life.

She was born in Galveston, Tex., but left there at the age of 6 months to live with her elder married sister in Gaudalajara, Mexico. There she grew up in the cultured surroundings of an old Spanish family into which her sister had married.

"I was educated in the Ursuline convent," she said, "and learned to speak Spanish, French and Italian before I studied English.

At the age of 17 I married Mr. Crounse, and had traveled extensively in Europe before I came to the United States to live."

Aside from her interest in the arts, Mrs. Crounse has found time to develop a hobby of collecting valuable antiques. Her beautiful Wyoming avenue home is furnished completely with the treasures she has obtained. "I have not followed any definite period but have chosen the most lovely pieces and have assembled them according to my own ideas," she explained.

92-Mile Gale Lashes Pacific Coast Cities

Floods Maroon Citizens in Homes; Guards Rescue 50.

Seattle, Dec. 17 (AP).—The Grays Harbor cities of Aberdeen and Hoquiam in western Washington were flooded by the highest waters in their history today in the wake of a mild winter gale.

On Grays Harbor, an 11-foot tide, accompanying a tremendous downpour of rain, backed up three rivers flowing through the two cities.

In south Aberdeen, on the Chehalis River, all available small boats were rushed to rescue families marooned in their homes, who were calling for help from their windows.

Wind 92 Miles an Hour.

The Coast Guard weather observer at Westport called it a 92-mile gale. The power plant of the Grays Harbor Railway & Light Co. was out of commission.

Battered by falling trees, power and telephone lines all over the area were down. Only one telephone line was open to Seattle.

Under the direction of Capt. H. J. Persson, Coast Guard commander at Westport, about 500 people were rescued from their homes at South Aberdeen.

Dock Washed Away.

A 90-mile gale lashed the entire Oregon coast.

At Port Orford a $65,000 dock was washed out by heavy seas and 10 fishing boats torn from their anchorage and tossed on the beach, a total loss.

In Portland electric light wires were blown down in all sections of the city, telephone poles and trees crashed and plate glass windows broke beneath the force of the wind.

Air travel to the East and South was halted.

Tennessee Joins Closing of Tobacco Marts.

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 17 (AP). Tennessee joined Kentucky tonight in a tobacco sales "holiday."

Gov. McAlister asked all growers and warehouse operators to discontinue sales "until such time as plans for controlling tobacco production can be put into effect."

Tennessee's chief executive said he was convinced, after conferences, that closing the markets "is the only way to handle the situation."

A formal proclamation will be issued tomorrow, he said.

Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 17 (AP).—Gov. Ehringhaus said tonight he was ready to cooperate in any feasible plan to raise prices of burley tobacco, but declined to say whether he would ask a closing of the Asheville market.

Ford Strikers Get NRA Aid Promise

Leaders Quote Conference Held Here Recently.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 17 (AP).—Promise that the NRA would consider their grievances was held out today to strikers of the Ford plant at Edgewater by leaders in the strike, in reporting on conferences they had held last week in Washington with members of the National Labor Board.

Addressing a group of about 300 strikers at the Labor Lyceum, Hugh V. Reilly, former secretary of the New Jersey State Federation of Labor, said he had been given assurance by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, that Gen. Hugh Johnson would take action in the strike.

"I took the case (of the strikers) up with Mr. Johnson," Reilly quoted Green as saying, "and he asked that we have all our data in his hands by Tuesday and he will then make a decision on a hearing."

Late Warning Averts French Wine Threat

High Tax on U. S. Fruit in Quota Pact Revealed at Last Minute.

Paris, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—A last-minute warning to Washington from the United States Embassy here probably saved America from signing an agreement whereby the French wine import quota would have been increased fourfold without compensating advantages to American exports to France, it was learned reliably tonight.

The wine accord was almost concluded last Friday, the United Press was informed, when the United States diplomatic authorities learned the French ministry of agriculture was preparing prohibitive import license taxes on apples and pears. These taxes, the American importers declared, would have nullified the increased fruit quotas which France offered American products.

Planning Further Levies.

It was learned subsequently the ministry also was considering heavy license taxes on ham, pork and lard, on which the United States quotas also were to be increased here. It is now believed that the United States will not sign unless assured France will not impose prohibitive duties on her products shipped into this country.

American fruit importers will confer with Foreign Minister Joseph Paul-Boncour and representatives of the ministries of agriculture, finance and commerce tomorrow. They will urge that France grant a 1934 quota of 1,000,000 bushels of American apples and pears.

Tax Nearly an Embargo.

The Americans said they would pay a license tax of 7½ francs (about 45 cents) a case on apples and 10 francs on pears, but claimed that the French government proposed taxes equivalent to an embargo, running nearly $2 a case on pears.

Meanwhile, the French brandy distillers are becoming alarmed at reports the government is seeking to increase the wine exports to the United States without making provision for cognac. They pointed out that cognac and champagne were France's chief alcoholic exports to the United States before prohibition.

Illness in Death Cell Will Not Cheat Chair

Ossining, Dec. 17 (AP).—Sing Sing authorities said today that Ross Caccamise, 22, condemned prisoner, of Rochester, N. Y., who refused to be operated on for appendicitis, would die in the electric chair, after all.

Prison doctors said there was no doubt that Caccamise had an acute attack of appendicitis, but today the prisoner rested comfortably in his death house cell.

New England Society Will Give Toys to Yule Fund.

Members and friends of the New England State Society will enjoy the Christmas party at the Kennedy-Warren Apartments all the more tomorrow night, because toys for The Post Toy and Doll Fund have gained them admission to the merry making.

News came to the Santa Claus lady yesterday that the New England society expected a record attendance, and that the fund might count on many toys being added to the thousands Santa Claus' aids are arranging at fund headquarters in the Washington Building.

The Post Toy and Doll Fund snowball must grow much larger by Saturday night if requests of thousands of children to be remembered at Christmas are granted. It is only seven days to Christmas, and word has come from Santa Claus that he will need every toy possible in order to fill all the empty stockings in Washington.

Mascot Brings Gift.

Ding-How, mascot of The Junior Post, who has worked hard assembling his friends in the Pets Corner to get back of the fund, bustled in last night with a dollar gift from Pixie and Wags, two friends, who have cut down their own Christmas list so they might assist.

"This is to be a busy week," barked Ding-How. "I am making a last round-up of everyone I think might help the fund and it keeps me going from morning until night. But I don't mind. Did you see that great pile of toys which came to the fund after the Keith Theater party Saturday? And that doll house? Won by little Emile Kohler. It is worth visiting fund headquarters just to see that house."

Other eyes than Ding-How's are watching the progress of the fund. They are the longing eyes of those who are to benefit from it.

This morning the fund as it stands will be divided on a per capita basis among organizations and institutions represented by the Council of Social Agencies. The sums will be given according to the number of children for whom it is necessary to buy toys. Distribution of the money will take place through the council and while there will not be enough to go around as yet, it is important that it be placed in the hands of those who are to buy gifts at the earliest possible moment.

Appeals Are Noted.

Individual appeals for help received by the fund have been noted and after investigation by welfare agencies, in order to avoid duplication through similar efforts, will be answered with toys that will delight children Christmas morning.

The Post Toy Fund mail continues to be crowded with pathetic letters asking for a share in the Chrsitmas joy. A new development this year is that a number of appeals have been received from Government clerks who claim that because of curtailment of pay and furloughs they are unable to spare money with which to buy toys for their children. Many of those on relief rolls also have confided to the Santa Claus Lady that the meager weekly allowance will not permit even the smallest sum to be set aside for toys.

But children of such families know nothing of budgets, public works, relief allowances. All they know is that Christmas is nearly here and like every child in the world, they expect Santa Claus to call at their homes Christmas eve.

Shall any one of these children be disappointed? The Post Toy Fund says "No!" It can only make good on this promise through the gifts, large or small, of the people of Washington. Address all gifts to The Post Toy and Doll Fund, Washington Post.

Toys may be left either at fund headquarters in the Washington Building, or by telephoning Sterling 8455, after which a Terminal taxi man will call for them.

Cancer Study Finds Heredity Tricky Factor

Strains of Mice Developed of Opposite Reaction to Disease.

The influence of heredity on the growth of malignant tumors in mice, which may shed light on the genetic and environmental factors in the growth of human cancer, was demonstrated last night in the Carnegie Institution by scientists who have been studying the problem for years.

Through a series of experiments on mice afflicted or inoculated with leukemic cells, which produce a cancer-like growth in mice, it was shown in some instances, provided immunity, while in another strain, heredity was the equivalent of a death warrant.

Strain Develops Resistance.

In one experiment two strains of mice were used. One family had been bred from parents which were resistant to the disease, and in six generations there had not been a single death from leukemia, while another family was bred from susceptible parents and the disease killed every mouse in six generations.

The leukemic cells, which grow wildly in susceptible animals, may be transplanted to a normal mouse and may continue their rapid growth if the mouse provides the proper environment; but if the mouse provides a different environment the growth may be checked.

Uniform Results.

Dr. J. S. Potter and Dr. Joseph Victor, who conducted the experiments, explained that by long inbreeding strains of mice have been developed within each of which all individuals provide a uniform environment for transplanted cells. Any mouse from one strain will allow certain transplanted cells to grow, while the same cells would not grow in a single mouse from another strain.

A lecture on the electricity in the atmosphere was given by Dr. G. R. Wait of the department of terrestrial magnetism of the institution.

Shine Parlors Robbed.

Thieves early yesterday forced the door of a shoe shining parlor at 807 Twelfth street northeast and stole $9 from the cash register, Joseph Oliver, proprietor, told police.

Latin America By Air Subject Of Travel Talk

Flying Transport Official Speaks Tomorrow on Nearby Lures.

The American clipper sailing vessels which generations ago established a new standard of speed in transportation for international trade and new prestige for the United States, now have a modern counterpart in the American Clipper airliners which encircle the entire continent of South America.

William J. Van Dusen, director of public relations for the Pan-American Airways system, which circles a sea and continent and connects 30 foreign countries with the United States, will describe the thrilling experience of flying over crystal waters of the tropics, the world's most beautiful mountain country, primitive jungles and the teeming cities of modern Latin America, tomorrow night at 8:15 at the Masonic Auditorium, New York avenue at Thirteenth street, northwest.

This will be the seventh in a series of 20 travel talks sponsored by The Washington Post for the purpose of acquainting its readers with the characteristics of foreign lands and their peoples. Through the Associated Press and other news-gathering facilities, The Post is in constant contact with every civilized quarter of the globe and information provided in this manner supplies a valuable and interesting background for the interpretation of the day's international news.

Mr. Van Dusen will be introduced by Rex Martin, assistant director of the Bureau of Aeronautics, Department of Commerce, who will indicate the advantages of air transportation in developing foreign and domestic commerce and promoting amicable relations among nations.

In addition to a vivid descriptive talk that will review the romantic history of our neighbors to the South, motion pictures with sound and music will be used to show the charms of South American scenery and the sharp contrast between the old and new which is so characteristic of Latin America.

Each week has revealed increasing interest in this Post lecture series, and tomorrow night's subject is expected to exert a particularly wide appeal. For that reason early arrival is suggested, as seats are not reserved except for holders of season tickets. Season tickets are available for the remaining 14 travelogues at the price of $3.50. Admission to individual lectures is 25 cents, and tickets may be obtained at the Masonic Auditorium box office beginning at 7:30 p. m. on lecture evenings.

The Once Over.

By H. I. Phillips.

Fears For a Worthy Cause.

I

Gone is vaudeville, say the showmen,
From the summits near and far;
Gone the featured "next to closing"—
Gone the hoofer and the star.
For vaudevillians I am sorry,
For its stars I'm moaning low,
And I wonder, how I wonder,
Where those trained dogs acts will go?

II

For the comics and the singers
Of the two-a-day I mourn—
For the small acts and the features
I've a heart that's duly torn;
For the Fays, the Sophie Tuckers
And their kind my heart is sore—
But the man with 20 trick dogs
Is the guy I'm weeping for!

III

Oh, the teams of song and dancing,
Oh, those singles with their gags!
I shall miss them in the winter
When my entertainment lags;
Sympathies I am extending—
(You know how a feller feels)—
But I weep most for the booker
Of a troup of talking seals!

IV

For the Gallaghers and Sheans
I now sigh and shed a tear;
It is said to see a form of Entertainment disappear.
For those tap-dance boys I'm sorry—
They were willing, eager chaps—
But the eggs I'm most concerned for
Are those barrel-tossing Japs!

V.

All those "tab revues," oh, mister,
What will they be doing now?
All those fifteen-minute playlets—
They are ripe upon the bough;
They've my most sincere good wishes,
But my thought of them abates
When I think about the future
Of those teams on roller skates!

VI.

Tough indeed will be the going
For those great, big dancing acts,
And those teams of dancing sisters
Will now have to face the facts;
I am saddened by the prospect
That the vaudeville stars are thru—
But I'm more so when I wonder
What the monkey acts will do.

VII.

For the Ed Wynns of the future,
For the Cantors and the Fays,
For the Ostermans and Marxes
Who are trained in vaudeville's ways,
I am filled with apprehension,
And my tear ducts get the cramps
When I think about the fellows
Who just juggled hats and lamps!

No Calls for a Stop Watch.

There is now a code limiting the duration of kisses in the movies. But there is one occupation in which there will always be chiseling.

Everybody is now demanding that the bootlegger be driven out of American life. If this is done who's going to buy all those imported limousines, two-screw yachts and Florida castles?

Dr. Calvin Declares U. S. Faces Teacher Problem.

Dr. Ambrose Caliver, specialist in Negro education, of the Office of Education of the Department of the Interior, addressed the Mussolit Forum yesterday on the "New Deal in Education." He spoke of his part-time service with the Federal Relief Administration concerned with special problems of unemployed teachers.

The Government, he said, finds itself handicapped in securing the most capable teachers in its vocational, adult education and illiteracy projects, because of disinclination of capable persons to place their names on relief rolls.

Retardation of colored children in public schools, he stated, was far out of proportion to general retardation and constituted a special problem for school administration and for the taxpayer.

Stock Losses In Week Stand At 3.1 Points

Market Is Clouded by Rumors of Stabilizing U. S. Money.

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Traders generally viewed financial markets through glasses clouded with currency stabilization rumors this week and neither stocks nor staples were able to emerge from the maze of indecision.

The Treasury attempted to spike the stabilization gossip early in the week, but, nevertheless, brokerage and banking circles believed that something was "in the wind."

It finally required an unquoted pronunciamento direct from the White House to put an end to the reports.

Conclusion on Stand.

The conclusion was that there had been no currency conversations between Administration officials and the foreign authorities, either formally or informally and that no change was being considered in the present gold-buying program as a means of lifting commodity prices. The inference was left that the existing rate of $34.01 an ounce for the metal might be tilted at any moment.

Important operators in stocks, however, apparently decided that under the circumstances the sidelines were safest and none of them could be found with any positive market position.

The result was that shares ebbed and flowed in usually trendless sessions with the trading volume below normal. The average for 90 leading stocks recorded a loss of 3.1 points in the week at 78.5.

Foreign Exchange Watched.

All the markets watched foreign exchange closely. Under the stabilization stimulus, and a seasonal demand, the dollar displayed a quietly firm front.

On the week, the British pound sterling suffered a loss of 4½ cents at $5.12 and the French franc, at 3.14½ cents, was off .03½ of a cent.

Business and industrial news continued bright, with retail trade picking up substantially. Steel production, freight car loadings and electric power output improved. Most of the week-end trade reviews were highly optimistic for the turn of the year.

Fishery Report Raps Red Tape

Economical Operation of Seafood Trade Asked by Virginians.

Newport News, Va., Dec. 17 (AP).—Seven legislative recommendations were made in the annual report to the governor and the General Assembly of the Virginia Commission of Fisheries, made public by Ricard Armstrong, chairman of the fisheries body.

These recommendations sought to eliminate red tape, thereby providing more economical operation of the commission's business and at the same time save money for the men engaged in the seafood business, and to enable men in the industry to get the most out of it without imperilling conservation.

The report has just been transmitted to the governor by Mr. Armstrong. It will be distributed to members of the assembly and will be available for others interested in the industry. The report covers the year July 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933. That part of the report regarding oyster dredging recommended:

That under present law, costs attached to renting small areas of ground for purposes of cultivation are entirely unreasonable. For instance, applicant for 1 acre of oyster ground, if it has not been previously assigned, may be assessed costs aggregating as much as $9.50. This makes the leasing of a small area by a poor man practically impossible.

Licenses for catching oysters upon the public bottom are taken out as of October 1 of each year, which is the date now set for opening such bottoms for tonging. It would be a great help to workers if the date for taking licenses was made November 1, to be good until November 1 of the following year. This would enable those seeking work upon public bottoms to have a month's time in which to earn the necessary money to purchase a license.

Weagley Reelected Farm Bureau Head

Washington County Group Holds Annual Session.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 17 (Spl.).—C. F. Weagley, of Beaver Creek, was reelected president of the Washington County Farm Bureau at the eleventh annual meeting here yesterday.

Others elected were: Vice presidents, Simon L. Downey, N. V. Shervin and Richard Seibert; secretary, J. Kieffer Funk; treasurer, H. E. Fahrney; councilors, Jacob M. Rinkeney, Ira Downey, Cecil S. Following a banquet, addresses were made by Dr. R. A. Pearson, president of the University of Maryland; Miles H. Fairbanks, secretary Maryland Farm Bureau, and County Agent Milton D. Moore.

Tea Company Sales Drop.

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. reports sales for the five weeks ended December 2 at $77,630,688, a decrease of 9 per cent from the corresponding period of last year. Tonnage sales totaled 460,525, a decrease of 6.7 per cent.

Payments Under Our Dole

$1.75 an Hour, $52.50 a Week, Means Serious Trouble in Time

By Ralph West Robey.

Some days ago I commented here on the extraordinary scale of wages being paid at the minimum levels under the C. W. A. In that connection, two points were made. The first was that it must be recognized that projects being financed through the C. W. A. are simply work-relief, with few exceptions, and, consequently, would not be undertaken were it not for the necesity of coming to the aid of the unemployed. Because of this, it was concluded that the C. W. A. is nothing more than an Americanized dole, differing from doles in other countries only in that here one has to make at least the semblance of doing some work under Government supervision in order to be eligible for the payment.

The second point made was that the rate of such dole at the minimum level is above the minima established in NRA codes for all of the major industries. It was emphasized that this indicated an error of judgment at one place or the other. In other words, if 40, 45, and 50 cents an hour, the minima under the C. W. A., are not too high, then the minima established under the NRA codes are too low. Conversely, if the minima established under the codes are sufficiently high—and they were claimed to represent an increase over prevailing rates and to provide a "reasonable" living wage—then the C. W. A. minima represent extravagance, for no one, I believe, would attempt to defend the desirability of a dole being above wages established by Governmental authority for productive work. In a word, either the C. W. A. level or the NRA level is wrong.

Wages Above Minimum Levels Reflect Equal Extravagance.

All of this refers merely to the minimum wage requirements. There is, accordingly, another aspect, namely the rate paid to those who get above the minimum dole. The situation here is, if anything, even more startling than that found at the bottom of the wage scale. What it amounts to, or can amount to, as a means of extravagant poor relief, is well shown in a decision growing out of a controversy among CWA workers in Washington.

This controversy, as reported in the press, arose from the fact that the skilled mechanics were getting less than bricklayers. Specificially they were getting only $1.10 an hour while the bricklayers were getting $1.75 an hour. This, it was held by the skilled mechanics, was unfair and they demanded that their pay be raised to equal that of the bricklayers. They have won their point and henceforth will receive the higher figure. This, on a 30-hour week, will give them $52.50 a week.

Again, let us emphasize, the question at issue is not whether skilled mechanics and bricklayers should be paid $1.75 an hour when employed in the usual run of business. That, of course, is an important question, and also an exceedingly complicated problem since it involves the whole issue of productivity and price levels, but at the moment we are talking about payments under a dole.

As a Dole the Rate Exceeds All Reason.

Now, as a dole, it seems to me there can be no question that $1.75 an hour is an outrageous scale of wages. Fifty-two dollars and fifty cents a week is a high level of earnings under the best of conditions. It is far more than the average worker in the United States is, or ever has been, able to earn, except perhaps at the peak of the wartime inflation.

The argument advanced in support of the scale is that it increases the self-respect of the workers. Instead of their having to think of themselves as being on relief, they can view themselves as people who really are at work. They can associate, accordingly, with their fellow-workers in the same field as equals in every respect instead of as persons being aided by public charity.

All of this perhaps is true. The fact remains, nevertheless, that these men are on public charity. They are doing work for which some one must pay through higher taxes. It is work, too, by and large, that except as a means of distributing charity would not be undertaken.

Of course, it is pleasant for these workers to make as much or more than they have been able to make in several years. Our problem, however, is to take care of the unemployed and keep them from starving and freezing, not to establish a standard of living for the unemployed above that which those engaged in private industry are able to maintain. No nation in the world can afford to establish a dole on such a level, and in due time, unless we revise these wage scales, we shall find that our extravagance in this and other directions has washed away the foundations of our Government's credit.

Improved Steel Operation Aids General Outlook of Business

New York, Dec. 17.—Optimism on the outlook pervading the financial community and scattered indications of some betterment in the buisness picture failed to translate themselves into higher prices for securities during the past week. Early strength gave way to later irresolution. While the list held close to the highs on the recent advance, it showed inability to push forward in decisive fashion.

The most encouraging factor in the outlook is the improvement in the rate of steel operations. Expansion in this direction is contraseasonal at this time, so the gain now augurs well. In other lines, the improving trend has not been so impressive, but in a few directions it has been enough to arouse hopes.

While department store sales in the big Eastern cities haven't been impressive, in certain sections of the country, particularly in the Middle West and in the South, there has been a good seasonal volume of business. Cold weather aided seasonal lines, and Christmas buying has been an important factor.

Over the near-term future, two factors loom as of vital importance to the financial markets. One is the possibility that out of the White House conferences, held during the past week, will come some new monetary move, calculated to lift prices. The Administration still is far short of its avowed goal for commodity prices. With the new session of Congress only a brief time off, and with the clamor for action still in the air, the Administration possibly will act further in the near future.

The other important factor is the growing total of Government expenditures on public works, in loans to railroads for equipment purchases and repairs, and in the Civil Works Administration. The capital goods industries are being stimulated by the former, while consumer buying is being aided by the latter. The two combined should have a material effect on the general business level in the first quarter of 1934.

Steel conditions took a decided turn for the better in the past week. Operations started off at 31.6 per cent of capacity, according to the American Iron & Steel Institute, a jump of 3.2 per cent from the preceding week. Besides this unseasonal rise in operations the trade was cheered by two successive increases in steel scrap prices at Pittsburgh, and similar mark-ups at other steel centers.

	High	Low	Last
30 Industrials ..	102.92	99.95	99.95
20 Railroads	43.09	41.45	41.45
20 Utilities	24.45	23.67	23.70
40 Bonds	83.34	82.69	83.14

Week ended December 15, 1933.

Curb's Upturn Falls Back in Selling Dribble

New York, Dec 17 (AP).—The curb market went through a series of confused movements last week, net results showing little change for the period. Prices started firm but trading went stagnant at higher levels and dribbles of selling appeared later.

Utilities continued to reflect the recent betterment in the power industry. The group resisted selling and moved moderately higher during quiet periods. American Gas & Electric common and preferred, Consolidated Gas of Baltimore and Commonwealth Edison were firm. Electric Bond & Share yielded slightly.

Alcohols and metals improved under late buying flurries after drifting lower earlier in the period. Oils were mildly irregular. The Standard Oil issues held fairly but Humble and Gulf Oils met light offerings. Humble Oil (new) opened at 35 on its initial trading and maintained a rather narrow range in subsequent dealings.

A number of industrial specialties were in improved demand, including Jones & Laughlin Steel, A. O. Smith, Novadel Agene and United Shoe Machinery. Pan American Airways was slightly reactionary.

Total transfers, which increased moderately over the previous week, averaged somewhat better than 250,000 shares per five-hour session.

Telegraph Employes To Receive Dividend

President Jerome K. Eldridge of the Western Union Employes Credit Union has announced an initial dividend of 6 per cent will be paid January 5, on stock of record December 31. The concern was organized last January 7 and Eldridge has headed it since that time. Only employes of the telegraph company are eligible to own stock.

Eldridge recently was elected vice president of the Cooperative Credit League of the District of Columbia, and is also vice president of the Association of Western Union Employes, Local No. 61, of the District.

Wheat Hopes Centered on Congress Step

Traders Look to Capital for Cues in Planning Future Business.

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—Hopes for new life in the grain markets are now centered in large degree upon the assembling of Congress in January.

Legislative possibilities regarding monetary affairs appear so wide that most grain traders look to Washington for inspiration, and with the Government definitely committed to promise of higher prices for agriculture, the wheat market, despite setbacks from time to time, displays a stubborn upward trend.

Compared with a week ago, wheat this morning varied from exactly unchanged figures to 1 cent higher, with corn 1 to 2 cents lower, oats ¼ to ⅜ off, and provisions 40 cents down to 12 cents up.

It is pointed out that whereas United States winter wheat is more affected by sping moisture rather than winter moisture, the domestic spring wheat crop is to a considerable extent determined by whether there exists an ample subsoil moisture reserve.

In this connection, persistent drought over large areas of the domestic spring wheat belt is being emphasized as significant, especially as there exists also a pronounced dry area in parts of Canada, although fairly good snowfalls have ben experienced in more Northern sections of late.

Meanwhile, with cold weather and but little snow protection for domestic winter wheat, the prospect of obtaining a large yield this season is regarded at present as slim.

The United States Government crop report giving the condition of 1934 domestic winter wheat and rye and also the seeded acreage will be given to the trade next week, as will also the final official estimate on the 1933 crops.

The final figures on the 1933 yields are not expected to show much change from the preliminary returns already known. So far, there has been no general buying of Argentine or Australian wheat on the part of importing countries, but owing to recently established government control both by Argentina and Australia it is not expected that there will be the usual pressure abroad which normally follows the Southern Hemisphere harvest.

Corn and oats prices have sagged owing a good deal to dispute as to whether farmers will generally accept the Government's offer to lend 45 cents a bushel on cribbed corn.

Grocery Sales In Dollars Rise

November Gains 1 Per Cent After Usual Seasonal Decrease.

The dollar volume of grocery sales in November, through a selected sample of chain units, was about 1 per cent higher than last year, according to preliminary estimates of the Department of Commerce. Total sales in the first 11 months of 1933 were 7½ per cent below the corresponding period of 1932.

November sales this year showed an approximately normal seasonal decrease of 1.7 per cent from the previous month.

The percentage changes given above are based on average daily sales so computed as to eliminate the effect of differences in the number of working days of the several months and to allow for the varying importance of different days in the grocery week.

These estimates are based upon figures furnished by a cooperating group of chain organizations and represent stores continuously in operation since 1929. Consequently they show changes in the value of consumer purchases rather than expansion or decline in the scope of the chains included. The reporting firms operate over 70 per cent of the chain grocery units in the U. S. and the sample is so constructed as to give all regions of the country their proper relative importance as shown by the census of distribution. Arrangements are being made to supplement these reports, at an early date, by reports from a large sample of independent grocers.

This is one of three indexes already set up to aid in tracing the movement of goods into consumer's hands. A release on variety goods has already been issued this month. Automobile figures will follow in a few days.

Germans Pushing Woodwork Trade

Substantial improvement has occurred in the German woodworking industry during recent weeks, according to a report from the American consulate general, Berlin, made public by the Commerce Department.

All branches report that additional workmen had to be employed to keep pace with this improvement, the report states. The financial assistance given by the government to couples contemplating marriage, it is pointed out, is beginning to have a favorable effect on the furniture and allied industries.

Exports of furniture and other wooden products from Germany is still difficult because of new import restrictions abroad. Holland has followed the example of France and Switzerland in placing a contingent on imports of furniture.

The prices of the raw materials used by the wood-working industry have increased strongly during the past few months, the report states. A shortage was felt in certain high quality woods and the almost prohibitive lumber duties make it difficult to equalize this shortage by increased imports from abroad.

Turkey Market Feels Stimulus of Repeal

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—P. Q. Foy, market expert, said today that under the stimulus of repeal the consumption of turkeys has doubled and trebled in hotels and restaurants.

He added, moreover, the price being received by the turkey growers is double that of the Thanksgiving period and a Christmas shortage is in prospect.

Maine Latest to Ratify Child Labor Amendment

Augusta, Me., Dec. 17 (AP).—Maine has added its vote to the list of ratifiers of the proposed Child Labor Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

In an early morning session, made stormy by dissension over fiscal and liquor measures, the Legislature voted to ratify and sent the bill to Gov. Louis J. Brann, who immediately signed.

Bond Market Closes Higher Despite Fears

Leading Loans Advance as Optimistic News Aids Rail Issues.

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—The bond market was torn between currency stabilization hopes and dollar depreciation fears last week, but was able to finish just a little better than even.

Leading loans began the week with a sharp advance coincident with reports that representatives of the Administration had been consulting informally with the authorities of Great Britain and France regarding some sort of an agreement to "peg" the dollar-pound-franc rates around their then existing levels.

At the same time, highly optimistic and industrial news began to appear and the rails, especially, picked up strength with indications that traffic in the early months of next year would show substantial improvement.

Prime Loans Firm.

Prime investment utilities and industrials firmed under renewed demand and many secondary maturities moved up sharply.

After the first flush, however, traders and investors exhibited some hesitation and on Tuesday and Wednesday prices as a whole neither advanced nor declined. There were subsequent irregularities but minor gains were retained in most departments. The White House let it be known that its gold-buying policy was unchanged and further dollar declines were expected.

United States government securities were again subjected to dips and rallies, although the majority more than held their own over the week. Some further Treasury buying from various sinking funds was reported, and institutional purchases were also thought to have aided in bolstering up the Federal section.

Large Money Transactions.

Transactions in the money market on Friday were the largest in several years. Due to the government's financing, around $2,000,000,000 was involved, including some $500,000,000 cash. The big turnover included the meeting of a Treasury maturity of $727,000,000 from the proceeds of the new $950,000,000 one-year note issue.

The oversubscription by more than three times of this offering continued to cheer holders of governments.

Foreign obligations, generally, continued to follow exchange movements. German loans turned heavy on reports that the 50 per cent cash payments on the Reich's external debt service might have to be curtailed unless exports were expanded. The Argentines were also reactionary.

Commodities Prices Drop

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Wholesale commodity prices, as measured by the Daily Weighted Price Index, compiled by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., tended to ease off during the past few days. On Thursday, December 14, the index stood at 99.53, as compared with 100.91 on the same day of the preceding week, a drop of 1.38 points. Comparing the latest index with the same day of the previous year, however, when the index stood at 71.33, reveals an increase of 39.5 per cent.

Twelve of the 30 basic commodities included in the index declined from the previous week, while only four advance. Among the former were listed wheat, rye, oats, flour, lard, sugar, butter, hogs, hides, silk, rubber and silver. The advancing commodities were corn, coffee, steers and lambs.

Following is tabulated the Dun & Bradstreet Daily Weighted Price Index of 30 basic commodities compiled from quotations furnished by the United Press, since November 1, for this year and last (1930-1932 equal 100):

Company's Trend Is Upward.

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—A posthumously published report by the late Alexander Legge, president of International Harvester Company, said the company's situation "shows an improvement, even though it is slight." The general trend, Legge wrote in the Harvester World, is upward practically over the world. He anticipated the Harvester Company's loss would be substantially less than in 1932.

Cotton Prices Change Little; Offers Taken

Reports of More Demand in Goods Helps Tone of Market.

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—The cotton market has fluctuated irregularly within a comparatively narrowrow range during the past week.

After selling up to 10.22 during Monday's early trading on a moderate trade and commission house demand which appeared to be encouraged by improving trade reports.

March contracts eased off to 10.07 during the middle of the week under a little more Southern selling and realizing or liquidation.

Small Offerings Absorbed.

There was a sufficient demand from the trade and scattering sources to absorb the small offerings, however, and while there were reactions the tone was fairly steady toward the end of the week with March closing tonight at 10.16 compared with 10.05 at the close of the previous week.

Reports of a renewed demand for cotton goods helped the tone of the market during the earlier part of the week, but evidently failed materially to stimulate speculative interest, and the failure of demand to become more aggressive probably led to some liquidation of scattering long accounts later.

More Southern Hedging.

There also seemed to be a little more Southern hedging, at times suggesting that some cotton might be coming out of the interior in advance of the holidays, but offerings from all sources were light.

While at times cotton moved independently of the dollar during the week, traders are still watching the foreign exchange markets very closely, and fluctuations have roughly followed the course of sterling during the greater part of the period.

The report of the Census Bureau showing domestic consumption of 475,368 bales for November was slightly below expectations, but, in view of improving trade accounts, had little apparent influence on the market.

50 Employes Recalled to Work.

Bucyrus, Ohio, Dec. 17 (AP).—The Swan Rubber Co. recalled 50 employes to work, anticipating steady production through the rest of the winter.

Dairymen to Get $17,000 Payments

Brooklyn Distributor Must Make Shortages Good.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 17 (Spl.).—Several hundred farmers in this section have been notified that the New York State Milk Control Board has ordered George Kotcher, Brooklyn, N. Y., milk distributor, to pay the dairymen $17,000, representing alleged underpayments.

The distributor, the board held, violated established minimum price orders.

The board also stated that Kotcher, to whom the dairymen ship their milk, deducted more than $6,000 from the dairymen's checks for losses sustained from milk flavored with garlic.

Pre-Christmas Treat for the City's Lonely

By Nelson B. Bell.

Conscious of the picture's worth as one of the cinema's distinguished reproductions of the more favorable aspects of life as it was lived in an earlier and simpler era of our national development, and believing that in its gentle sentiment, tender pathos and appealing romance an especial charm exists for those who have not as yet braved the trials and tribulations of a high-geared mechanical era as well as for those who have entered life's shadow and look back with longing and perhaps a furtive tear to the days of long ago, The Washington Post, the management of RKO-Keith's Theater and the Greyhound Bus Lines are jointly playing host to the inmates of the orphanages and the homes for the aged in the District of Columbia during the final days of the extraordinary run of "Little Women."

There are 31 eleemosynary institutions in the District whose charges are being included among the guests of The Post and RKO-Keith's, with L. C. Major, local manager of the Greyhound Lines contributing the transportation to and from the theaters for those who otherwise would be unable to avail themselves of this preholiday opportunity for a brief hour or two of sheer delight in following the experiences of Jo, Meg, Amy and Beth March, the charming daughters of "Marmee" and the pivotal characters in this beloved and perennially favorite novel of Civil War days in New England by Louisa May Alcott.

Already Entertained.

Already the Masonic and Eastern Star Homes, St. Vincent's Home, Hillcrest, Jewish Foster Home, St. Rose Technical School, St. Joseph Home and School, Baptist Home for Aged Ladies, Epiphany Church Home, Episcopal Church Home, Louise Home and Methodist Home have attended "Little Women" as guests of this paper, Manager Hardie Meakin and Mr. Major.

During the current week there still remain to be entertained the Baptist Home for Children, Industrial Home School, Episcopal Home for Children, German Orphan Asylum, St. John's Orphanage, Swartzell Methodist Home, Central Union Mission, Aged Women's Home, Catholic Home for Aged Ladies, Edes Home, Hebrew Home for the Aged, John Dickson Home, Lenthall Home for Widows, Little Sisters of the Poor, National Lutheran Home, Presbyterian Home, Rupert Home, Sacred Heart Home and Southern Relief Home.

No picture has ever been presented before audiences any more appreciative or any more thrilled by an unexpected and infrequent pleasure than "Little Women" on the days these guests are present to revel in the many gracious qualities of its characters and action.

One can only feel that in their inexcusable behavior at Union Station upon their arrival in Washington on Saturday at 5:10 p. m., Producer Jed Harris and his star, Katharine Hepburn, whose production of "The Lake" is to be given its first performance on any stage in the National Theater tonight, offered the management of the National and the local press a deliberate and indefensible affront. The spectacle of two adults sneaking out the "off" side of a Pullman car and streaking away across the railroad tracks to evade those whose worst intentions were to accord them a brief and friendly welcome is not so inspiring as it is infantile and petulant.

Those "Ten Best Pictures."

As was disclosed in these columns several days ago, the time now has come to cudgel the brain—if any—in an earnest if not eager attempt to comply with the request of Mr. Jack Alicoate, formerly of this journal and now editor and publisher of the Film Daily, to apprise his publication of the "Ten Best Pictures of the Year," a futile pursuit participated in by practically the sum total of the country's professional picture-gazers.

With Mr. Alicoate's request comes a list of some 400 or 500 titles that are eligible for the present competition—a number that is, of course, physically impossible for any dramatic desk to view unless it abandon all other enterprises and devotes itself exclusively to contemplating the screening of approximately two feature films every day of the year. Very few of us do this.

Not being able to keep abreast of Mr. Alicoate's list, the appraisals of any single reviewer must of necessity be limited to such pictures included in the total as he has been able to view—a comparatively minor proportion.

No Hope to See All.

This being the case, no single individual can with any reasonable expectation look forward to having a perfect score in the National voting. The final choices of all the major critics in the United States, some 400 or 500, according to Film Daily's tabulation, however, is pretty apt to result in the selection of what are actually the 10 best pictures released during the past year.

Fully aware of the hazardous undertaking that confronts us, we nevertheless are willing to set down what seem to us the ten best pictures from among such a meager percentage of Mr. Alicoate's complete list as we have personally viewed. As Mr. Bill Hay would say, here they are:

1. "CAVALCADE," Fox picturization of the Noel Coward spectacle that possesses a suprising number of virtues and an equally impressive paucity of defects.

2. "FAREWELL TO ARMS," Paramount's film version of the famous play, produced by Cecil B. De Mille, for being the year's mightiest spectacle and a picture that fulfilled every possibility of camera drama.

4. "I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG," Warner Brothers' stellar vehicle for Paul Muni's unique talents, for Mr. Muni's acting and the timeliness and poignancy of the story.

5. "LADY FOR A DAY," Columbia's amusing epic of poverty turned opulent, for the keenness of its humor and the sterling work of a grand actress long denied her just deserts, May Robson.

6. "TOPAZE," RKO-Radio's exceptionally deft picturization of a quaint play, for the incomparably fine work of John Barrymore in the stellar role.

7. "THE PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY VIII," United Artists' release of an English-made picture, for the admirable satire it presented on the happenings inside the royal walls and the inspired performance of Charles Laughton as the uncouth Tudor.

8. "MAEDCHEN IN UNIFORM," John Krimpsky and Gifford Cochran's importation of the German film, for the exquisite delicacy of its story and the fine work of Dorothea Wieck and Fraulein Thiele.

9. "42ND STREET," for combining a worthy dramatic narrative with a sprightly musical treatment and setting a new vogue in screen musicals.

10. "KING KONG," RKO-Radio's fantastic nightmare, because it never could have been anything but a motion picture and for the imagination and technical skill revealed in its production.

There they are—and may the Lord have mercy on our soul!

There is a well-grounded rumor afloat in Washington this week to the effect that the telephone operator in the District Attorney's office in "Blood Money," starring George Bancroft at the Palace, is played by Marge La Marr, in private life Mrs. Phil Lampkin, wife of the musical director at Loew's Fox, who these many months now has been in Hollywood laying the groundwork of a stellar career in the flickers. Marge seems a trifle more plump than when she departed the shores of the Potomac, but even Phil believes that's who it is, so what?

Hayden Honored.

For the twenty-seventh consecutive term, A. C. Hayden has been elected president of Local No. 161, of the American Federation of Musicians, the Washington branch of the National organization.

This is an unprecedented record, surpassing anything in the way of length of continuous service in an executive capacity that can be trotted out by any other officer of any other musicians' union in America.

The honor is one to which Mr. Hayden is not unentitled. Having known him for many years now in both a private and professional capacity, we have yet to see the time when he has turned an underhanded trick or labored otherwise than conscientiously and well for those who have placed their welfare year after year in his keeping.

Hayden fights hard and he may drag a fight out until it lasts pretty long, but he fights fairly, gives and asks no quarter and retains the respect and affection of those whom he battles as well as those who number themselves merely among the innocent bystanders. The attitude toward him of his associates is obvious.

Congratulations, Al Hayden, and a long life of continued usefulness.

It will ever be one of the mysteries of the making of newsreels why such a shot as the close-up crash of one of the drivers in the dirt-track motor car races out in Los Angeles, currently on the local screens, is stressed as a signal achievement in the purveyance of entertainment. To a majority of the audience it is a horrifying and blood-chilling spectacle that should be kept from public view instead of flaunted before it.

Where They'll Spend Xmas.

Film stars and their families for the most part, according to late report from the film capital, will spend the Christmas holiday in or near Hollywood, many observing the new fad of an outdoor Christmas tree and observance.

Barbara Stanwyck is planning one of the happiest Christmas observances of her life. Her 22-month-old son, Dion, is old enough to appreciate the season and the plans of Miss Stanwyck and her husband, Frank Fay, have been made with him in mind.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barthelmes will spend Christmas in their Beverly Hills home because his new picture will not be finished until December 26. They expect to be in New York for New Year's.

James Cagney will spend Christmas Day quietly in his new Hollywood home. He and Mrs. Cagney will have as their guests his brother, William, and his wife, the former Boots Mallory.

The Joe E. Browns will observe their nineteenth wedding anniversary on Christmas Eve and plan a family reunion for Christmas Day.

Dick Powell was forced by film work to abandon plans to spend Christmas with his mother and father in Little Rock, Ark. Instead his younger brother, Howard, will come to Hollywood to visit Dick.

Ruby Keeler and Al Jolson probably will spend Christmas at Palm Springs, where a number of other motion picture folk will be present.

Junior's First.

Eddie Robinson, jr., will be ready to observe his first Christmas and the plans of his actor father are being arranged accordingly.

There will be a family reunion at the home of Dolores Del Rio, her mother and father arriving in time for the Christmas observance from their home in Mexico City.

Bette Davis will fly to Phoenix, Ariz., in the hope of spending the holiday there with her husband, Harmon O. Nelson, New Yorker. If Nelson is unable to make the trip, Miss Davis says she will have the loneliest Christmas of her life.

Senator King Warns Against "Soaking Rich"

Sharp Income Tax Rise to Hinder Recovery, He Believes.

(United Press.)

A warning that a sharp increase in taxes on American business at this time would endanger President Roosevelt's recovery program was issued last night by Senator King (Democrat), Utah.

King a member of the Senate Finance Committee, emphasized the need of plugging up loop holes in income tax laws, but cautioned Congress to proceed slowly on "soak the rich" levies.

His warning came as the House Ways and Means Committee prepared to resume hearings today on revisions in the tax laws proposed by a subcommittee. Many of the subcommittee's recommendations were opposed by Acting Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau.

"Should Be Cautious."

"This is no time," King said, "to place any obstacles in the path of business recovery. We are pulling out of the depression and Congress must move cautiously on the whole tax question."

He said he favored an increase in income tax levies on unearned income in the upper brackets and lower rates on earned income of the small salaried worker.

The Treasury has proposed that taxes on earned income of less than $25,000 be reduced, and Chairman Hill (Democrat), Washington, of the subcommittee, indicated such a provision would be written into a general revenue bill.

Generally, however, the Ways and Means Committee has indicated that its proposals to the House would follow the lines of the subcommittee's report, rather than the course espoused by Acting Secretary Morgenthau.

Hill Not Convinced.

Hill said again last night that he did not believe the Treasury's arguments against his committee's recommendations were convincing. Chairman Doughton (Democrat), Alabama, of the full committee has taken a similar position.

The Ways and Means Committee expects to conclude hearings on the sub-committee's report during the present week. James A. Emery, counsel for the National Manufacturers Association; Benjamin C. Marsh, representing the people's lobby, and others are scheduled to appear today.

Bump Into Negro Ends in Slashing

Pedestrian Slugged and Stabbed by Pair.

Attacked by two colored men last night while walking near Seventh and K streets northeast, Theodore Fleetwood, 28, of 520 K street northeast, was stabbed in the throat and at Casualty Hospital his condition was reported as serious.

Fleetwood told police he accidentally bumped against one of the men in passing. The pair turned, he said, and without warning slugged him. During the scuffle one of his attackers drew a knife and slashed Fleetwood's throat. Ten stitches were required to close the wound.

"GALS FROM GEORGIA." Wilner Wonder Wheel presents a new burlesque show, starring Nora Ford, with Jack Ryon, Willie Gordon, the Ray Brothers, Steve Mills, Jack Coyle, Lucky Darlin, Georgia Clarke, Rosalie & Betty Roland, Dolly Hendricks, May Alcott and Jose and Morse. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

The Wilner Wheel shows have now hit their stride, the "Gals from Georgia" offering not only a new high for the "new deal" road shows but an entertainment which is easily the best all 'round demonstration of proficency of the current burlesque season.

With vim, vigor and vitality this company romps through its routines of song, dance and farce with an abandon not heretofore witnessed.

It is all swell fun this week, and nothing but approval can be bestowed upon Nora Ford and her able supporting company, headed by Lucky Darlin and Georgia Clarke. Indeed, Miss Ford's welcome—after a lengthy absence from Washington—was the most spontaneous for many weeks.

With Jack Ryon and Steve Mills as the "straights," the comedy of Jack Rosen and Willie Gordon is particularly fast moving and effective.

Especially outstanding was the work of Jose and Morse, whose tango number in the "By a River in Spain" chorus-ballet routine, and the adagio act in the "Beautiful Girl" number not only added embellishment to the fine work of the line, but demonstrated that burlesque can—and does—go in for art in a big way.

Orchids also should be given the chorus this week, for here is a group of girls that really can sing as well as dance.

All of which seems to indicate that Jimmie Lake is stealing a march on Santa Claus!

Brookings Report Challenges Roosevelt's Monetary Policy

ing the commodity price level by controlling the price of gold. Since the country is off the gold standard, the American price level is to be raised by a progressive depreciation of the paper dollar in terms of gold, that is, by offering more and more paper for gold.

"In effect the same result is expected to be attained that would be reached by a series of legal reductions in the weight of the gold dollar, which would automatically raise the price of gold. The gold purchase plan is held to have an advantage in that it permits continuous manipulation of the price of gold and the adjustment of its value in the light of changing conditions. It is also regarded as opening the way to a permanent system of controlling prices through currency manipulation."

Consequences Analyzed.

The study analyzed the consequences of the plan as measured by its objectives. Abandonment of the gold standard, it said, left the only way of measuring the dollar's gold worth to the determination of its value in terms of the monetary unit of some nation still on gold. For this purpose the institution chose France and the franc.

"For example," it said, "before the suspension of the gold standard, by the United States, the amount of gold in the dollar was 25.5 times the amount of gold in the French franc. The dollar was therefore worth 25.5 francs, and, when exchange was at par, was quoted at that rate in the foreign exchange markets. After the suspension of the gold standard, the dollar gradually declined in relation to the gold franc. It was quoted on November 1, 1933, as the equivalent of only 16.8 francs. Since the French franc still represented the same amount of gold as before, the foreign exchanges registered a depreciation of 35 per cent in the dollar.

"This depreciation of the dollar in terms of foreign exchange was giving us a rising price of gold. However, * * * it was subject to general factors, speculative and otherwise, influencing the foreign exchange rate and showed substantial fluctuations. This, it was argued, was the result of the fact that the Government was pursuing a passive policy with refrence to foreign exchange.

Gold Monopoly Set-up.

"A continuous rise in the price of gold, it was held, could be obtained only by inaugurating an active policy of controlled depreciation. Accordingly, as we have seen, a Government monopoly was set up for the purchase of all gold newly mined in the United States. Under this arrangement, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would offer arbitrarily determined amounts of paper money for each ounce of gold brought to it.

"Since, according to the theory, the American price level can be uninterruptedly raised only by a sustained rise in the price of gold and since for this purpose a progressive depreciation of the dollar on foreign exchanges is indispensable, the success of the plan depended fundamentally upon the effects of gold purchases upon the exchanges. It was apparently thought that the mere raising of the price of gold by the Government through gold purchases in the United States would automatically depreciate the dollar in foreign exchange quotations. It was recognized, however, that this might not prove to be the case; hence it was announced that the Government would be prepared to buy and sell gold in foreign markets, thereby directly influencing foreign exchange quotations."

The study then turned to an analysis of the effect of the increasing R. F. C. price on the foreign exchange value of the dollar and found no measurable pattern of movements resulting.

Finds Dollar Fluctuates.

"The dollar in the exchange markets has been at times above and at other times well below the R. F. C. price for newly mined gold," it said, "and it is evident that speculative sentiment has continued to be the controlling influence."

Considerable attention was devoted to studies of price movements which followed the depreciation of the currencies of several nations.

"Great Britain and Sweden abandoned the gold standard in September, 1931, and Japan in December of that year," it said. "* * * In Great Britain and Sweden, although the currency depreciated by roughly 30 per cent, which means a rise in the price of gold of more than 40 per cent, there was a slight decline in the level of commodity prices. In Japan the price of gold more than doubled; yet the general level of commodity prices registered a rise of only 19 per cent.

Upon the prices of goods produced principally for export, the institutions found that dollar depreciation had a buoying effect. Dollar depreciation on the foreign exchanges, it said, means that foreign monetary units will buy larger quantities of American goods, thereby stimulating demand for such commodities as are sold in well-organized international markets, such as cotton, rubber and wheat.

Limitations Noted.

It noted, however, "certain factors which tend to limit the extent to which the prices of both import and export commodities will respond to changes in the foreign exchange rate."

The institution presented a charted analysis of the movements of the prices of various basic commodities since abandonment of the gold standard, showing the price of gold increasing more than 50 per cent, while some commodities soared far upward, others moved higher but to a lesser degree. Still others were hardly changed. Two chemicals and anthracite coal went downward. The comment was:

"The diversity in the movements of 16 important individual commodities and groups of commodities since the dollar began to depreciate is graphically indicated. It will be noted that the prices of coal and chemicals have declined since April and that the prices of iron and steel, automobiles and agricultural implements have risen but little. The prices of other commodities have shown a wide range of fluctuation, some of them remaining persistently below the price of gold, some maintaining a position above it and some swinging up and down without any apparent relation to it. The largest fluctuations have occurred in the prices of such highly sensitive and speculative international commodities as rubber, wheat, cotton and hides."

Other Devices Discussed.

The survey mentioned other devices for stimulating prices, such as the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the NRA and efforts to expand credit through the Federal Reserve Board and the R.F.C.

"Even if one were to argue that these policies, singly or conjointly, have had no effect whatever in raising prices in the United States, and that the rise which has occurred is the sole result of the depreciation of the dollar, it still remains true that the extent of the rise in the general level of prices shows little correspondence with the rise in the price of gold.

"The great disparity between the two movements furnishes conclusive evidence that the theory of automatic adjustments between changes in the price of gold and changes in the commodity price level is without scientific validity. As a practical matter, the most that can be said for the theory is that the depreciation of the currency may, under conditions at present existing in the United States, help to bring the prices of some agricultural commodities entering into export trade which have been heavily depressed, into a more satisfactory adjustment with other prices. * * *

Uncertainty Is Obstacle.

Discussing "monetary uncertainty," the study said:

"It is recognized that a full employment of labor and thorough business recovery can not be expected until the construction of capital goods is resumed. The resumption of capital enterprise depends in large measure upon the resumption of normal issues of long-term securities. In the presence of an uncertain monetary policy the flotation of such securities is unquestionably deterred. While this problem is complicated by other factors, monetary instability is clearly an important contributing cause.

"Finally, experience shows that monetary uncertainty sooner or later leads to a deterioration of Government credit. So long as the uncertainty prevails, potential investors hesitate to purchase fixed income securities of all kinds, including those issued by the Government. Outstanding Government issues decline in value, with resulting repercussions upon the banking structure and the investment markets.

"In the United States the maintenance of Government credit is of especial importance because of its relation to other phases of the general recovery plan. Public loans must be floated if funds are to be available for carrying out the program of public works, as well as the numerous relief, housing, and agricultural projects now under way. Difficulty in borrowing might force the Government either to curtail these projects or to embark upon the issuance of greenback currency as an alternative means of meeting its financial obligations and requirements."

Carnegie Branch.

The Institute of Economics of Brookings Institution was endowed by the Carnegie Corporation of New York. In establishing the institute, the corporation said:

"The Carnegie Corporation, in committing to the trustees the administration of the endowment, over which the corporation will have no control whatsoever, has in mind a single purpose—namely, that the institute shall be conducted with the sole object of ascertaining the facts about current economic problems, and of interpreting these facts for the people of the United States in the most simple and understandable form. The institute shall be administered by its trustees without regard to the special interests of any group in the body politic, whether political, social or economic."

U. S. Distillers To Bare Costs Of All Whisky

List Will Seek to Place Blame for High Prices Upon Retailers.

Evidence to shift the blame for current high retail whisky prices from distillers to retailers will be offered this week through publication of price lists by members of the distilled spirits industry.

Predicting that such publication will meet "a great deal of current criticism on high whisky prices," Dr. J. M. Doran, supervisor of the distillers' code authority, also forecast an increased public demand for blended whisky.

"Distillers will file a number of price lists this week with the Federal Alcohol Control Administration," Dr. Doran said yesterday.

Confusion Temporary.

"The confusion of the present will be only temporary. The upset condition is readily understood when, despite some measures of preparation, there was an enormous demand suddenly created with ratification by Utah. It is surprising that as much whisky has been bottled and shipped to distilleries, when ten days ago it was practically impossible to know who were licensees under diverse State laws. No industry can increase 20 times in volume in 24 hours without having difficult problems to meet.

"All of these questions will work themselves out, and I refer especially to price and quality.

"Distillers have had to meet the problem presented by those who wished to speculate in 17-year-old whisky produced prior to prohibition. These old barrels now contain only 18 to 20 gallons where they originally were placed in the warehouses containing 48 to 50 gallons. There is a steady evaporation and soakage loss in stored whisky.

"Were the distillers to offer this limited and cotsly supply, which is irreplaceable, at prices that many well-intentioned but not informed people are demanding, the supply would not last 15 days. It would be snapped up by speculators and wealthy people.

Meets Label Regulation.

"There would be none left for blending to carry us over this readjustment period while reserve stocks of aged whisky are being built up.

"The industry will meet label requirements of the code and wants, above all, to have labels bear truthful statements. Blending of whisky is not merely a matter of mixing ingredients in fixed proportions. It requires skill and must vary with the particular kinds of materials used. Purity is the first consideration."

The latter portion of Dr. Doran's statement was regarded as an answer to Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, and Representative O'Connor (Democrat), New York), who recently condemned the sale of blended whiskies in drug stores.

Charities Are Finishing Plans to Distribute Cheer to Needy.

Washington merchants, the Capital Transit Co., and taxicab operators had a breathing spell yesterday between Saturday's throng that clogged stores and streets and the rush of tardy shopping expected the next six days.

Thousands of Washington children began the last lap of pre-Christmas good behavior as they await Santa's annual visit. And, because of toy fund drives, every one of them was assured of being included in the visit.

Washington's social life will take on a new gaiety this week, as many in the younger set return from finishing schools and universities. The very young will add to the general Yule hilarity when the public schools close Thursday until January 2.

Civic ceremonies will culminate in the lighting of the Community Christmas Tree at 5 o'clock, Christmas Eve, in Sherman Square. President Roosevelt will turn on the lights, and afterward broadcast a greeting to the Nation over a radio hookup.

Shopping Volume Grows.

While no figures are available yet, indications are that Washington merchants are doing an unusually large Christmas business. Dorsey W. Hyde, jr., Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, said informal reports are encouraging and that this week's trade is expected to far surpass previous weeks of this year.

The Capital Transit Co. is adding extra cars and is considering a plan to admit weekly pass holders via front doors on two-man cars in order to facilitate speed.

Government employes are looking forward to a happy week-end. They are assurred of at least a vacation of two days and a half and they are hoping all departments will close Saturday morning as well.

Jobless Made Happy.

Christmas this year will be happier for the thousands who have been given temporary employment in Washington by the Civil Works Administration and the Emergency Relief Administration.

For those who are still jobless and homeless the city's missions, the Salvation Army, and the charitable agencies are planning to furnish special dinners, either at the missions or in baskets to be delivered at impoverished homes.

Mrs. Roosevelt will assist in the distribution of 1,600 bags of gifts and goodies to needy children at the Central Union Mission's annual party at the Fox Theater Saturday morning.

The Washington Post Toy Fund and similar drives will assure every unfortunate child of receiving some toys and sweets to distinguish Christmas from the prosaic days of want.

The Christmas committee of the Council of Social Agencies will act as central distribution agency for all the toy-raising campaigns of the city.

Yule Decorations Appear.

Thousands of old toys are being reconditioned, and thousands of new toys are being contributed. All Community Chest organizations, the District Board of Welfare, and all other welfare organizations are gathering lists of needy children who will receive these gifts.

Varicolored electric lights or candles and the customary holly wreaths are already making an appearance in the windows of thousands of homes throughout the city. Streets are in gala array in Georgetown, Columbia Heights and Seventh street southwest.

Among the several community Yule celebrations will be an open-air program in Decatur Heights Thursday night around the local Christmas tree.

The National Capital Choir, singing at the National Press Club and over the N. B. C. and C. B. S. networks, as well as British and Canadian hook-ups, will be the highlight in carol singing over the city. The program will be from 1:30 to 2:15 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Among the numerous amateur presentations will be a pageant, "The Birds' Christmas Tree," by the District Girl Scouts, at the Sylvan Theater at 4:45 p. m., Friday, and the Children's Hospital at 4:30 p. m., Saturday.

Church Men's Society Will Assemble Tonight

The Men's Society of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church will meet tonight at 8 o'clock at the chapel on N street.

Maj. James Asher, commander of the Washington district of the Salvation Army, will be the speaker. Music will be furnished by the Salvation Army. The public is invited.

National Dairy Official Denies Dodging Quiz

Woolman Ready Any Time, He Says; McInnerney on Stand Today.

Henry N. Woolman, a director of the National Dairy Products Corporation, last night expressed surprise at published reports that he was attempting to evade appearance before the Senate Milk Investigating Committee which today resumes its hearings.

"I was in Washington most of last week," he said, "attending the meetings of the International Milk Dealers Association and was registered at the Mayflower Hotel. On Sunday I was informed that my presence was desired. Of course, I will appear at the hearing on Monday or at any time, when my services may be required."

Thomas N. McInnerney, president of the National Dairy Products Corporation, is expected to be the first witness called today. He will be asked to testify concerning his acquisition of the more than 500 subsidiaries of the corporation, while A. A. Stickler, treasurer of the corporation, will be asked to trace its financial operations.

Mgr. John A. Ryan, of Catholic University, has been asked by Mr. Seal to appear before the committee to testify to consumers prices in the District, as compared with prices in other cities.

NRA Job Canceled Before It Is Filled

Mabel Byrd, appointed to a position in the NRA office of Dr. M. Sachs about four months ago to study compliance of Southern industries with code provisions, went out of office yesterday before her work had begun. The job had been canceled.

The colored investigator, formerly of Chicago University, stated NRA officials did not deem it advisable to send a Chicago-trained colored woman into the South to check wage codes.

Save a Life!

Blood Donor Needed to Aid Girl, 17.

A 17-year-old girl, critically ill in Gallinger Hospital, is in need of new blood to save her life. Physicians say three transfusions have already been made, and the immediate blood supply is exhausted.

The young girl is Jean Sheers, of 2544 Fourteenth street northwest. Members of her family submitted to the former transfusions and have appealed for volunteer donors. An infection may cost the girl's life.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Sheers. A physician, who requested his name be withheld, asked The Post through its news columns and Postilion broadcaster, to aid in the search for volunteer blood donors.

Many volunteers called The Post immediately after first editions appeared on the street and the appeal was broadcast by the Postilion. Further details of the case were referred to the hospital. Among those who called seeking information were James Duffy, of 5507 Fourth street northwest, and C. K. DeWitt, of 4619 Forty-third place northwest.

Youth Is Shot By Accident

Weapon Discharged When Victim Hands It to Companion.

Elmer Warner, 15, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Warner of 517 Ninth street southeast, is in Georgetown Hospital with a rifle shot wound in the right foot.

Young Warner was handing a .22 rifle to Eddie Garrison, 16, of 508 Ninth street southeast, in the woods near Thrifton Village, Arlington County, yesterday afternoon, when the weapon was discharged.

The two boys, with Mr. and Mrs. James Paul, of 345 Eleventh street southeast, and William Scott, of 1107 E street southeast, were visiting Mrs. Mary Morris at her home at Woodmont and Milvern avenues, Thrifton Village.

Church Turns To Conscience In Liquor Fight

Dr. Wilson Says Appeal to Individual Replaces Legal Weapons.

The Methodist Board of Temperance is changing its tactics in its continuing fight against liquor, Dr. Clarence True Wilson, executive secretary, revealed yesterday in an address at the Trinity Methodist Church. Emphasis hereafter will be placed on personal abstinence, rather than State or National prohibition.

"Unquestionably, the church must change its emphasis from political, commercial and legalistic arguments back to normal appeal," he said. "The church must discard, for a time at least, its wholesale emphasis upon State and National prohibition, and re-create an individual conscience against drinking and drunkenness.

"A new epoch in the age-long fight against intemperance has begun. It is an epoch fraught with deeper significance than any which has preceded. We must, in the first place, shift our effort from law enforcement to personal conduct and create a conscience and intelligence against drinking.

"This country will demand that we do this. A machine age, with multiple thousands of airplanes and 25,000,000 automobiles, demands a steady nerve and a clear brain. It will have it or give us the consequences."

The Board of Temperance has elected an associate to conduct such an educational campaign, Dr. Wilson said. He is Dr. C. Stanley Lowell, a graduate of Asbury College and a holder of an A. M. degree from Duke University and a B. D. from Yale.

2 D. C. Commissioners To Address Citizens

District Commissioners Melvin C Hazen and George E. Allen will address the Brookland Citizens Association tonight at the Brookland Methodist Church Hall, Fourteenth and Lawrence streets northeast.

Child Health Termed First Duty of Relief

6,000,000 Children Are Listed Among Families on Dependent Rolls.

Lack of Funds Declared to Be Bringing Back Poor Farm System.

(Associated Press.)

A conference on the care of dependent and neglected children yesterday recommended that Federal, State and local emergency relief organizations assume as their "primary responsibility" the protection of the health and welfare of 6,000,000 children in families now on relief rolls.

Representatives of State welfare departments and public and private child caring agencies from 29 States and the District of Columbia also asked relief authorities to consider methods by which children living elsewhere than in their own homes might receive adequate care.

Through a continuing committee the conference "will confer from time to time with the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, Federal authorities, and congressional leaders and committees and otherwise cooperate to insure adequate care for needy children during the depression."

Relief Often Insufficient.

A statement by the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department said that State after State at the conference confirmed facts developed in a bureau field survey and by the Child Welfare Lague.

These were summarized thus:

"The unprecedented amount of family destitution, reduction in State and local appropriations, private contributions, and endowment funds have endangered the welfare of many children. In many instances emergency relief now given to families with children is insufficient to protect their health and welfare and prevent their removal from their own homes.

"Return to the 'thoroughly discredited system' of sending children to almshouses, forbidden by some States 60 years ago, has been resorted to in some instances.

"Although care of children in their own homes has been accepted ever since the White House conference of 1909 as preeminently to be desired for children, and although all but two States have passed mothers' pension laws under which approximately 250,000 children have been receiving such care, in some States and localities appropriations for widows' pension and mothers' aid have been seriously decreased.

Funds Inadequate.

"In some localities children who have been removed from their homes because of neglect or cruelty have been returned to homes in which conditions are unimproved, while some children are permitted by relief officials or courts to remain in homes where neglect, cruelty, or depravity exist, because no money is made available for their support elsewhere.

"Funds are inadequate for the support of homeless children in institutions and boarding homes. Another complication is lack of employment for needy boys and girls reaching the age of 16, leaving child-caring institutions and agencies overcrowded and understaffed."

Capital Resident's Dog Is Poisoned

As Shreve exercised the animal it collapsed near his home. A veterinarian said the canine died from eating meat tainted with strychnine. Shreve reported his loss to police.

Auctioneer's Hammer Sounds Death Knell of the Dewey Era

The former home of Admiral and Mrs. Dewey, 1601 K street northwest, where both spent their last years. It was once Washington's showplace.

Sale Strips K Street House That Once Knew World's Great.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

The clang of the auctioneer's hammer which closed the sale of the Dewey treasures on Friday also marked the end of what might be called the Dewey epoch in Washington society. Among the little group of Dewey friends and relatives gathered to rescue from the careless hand of the stranger precious souvenirs of Admiral and Mrs. Dewey few could remember when this widow of a nation's hero first came to the National Capital to reside.

Washington is, in many ways, a city of ghosts, where many houses are crowded with memories of the great of yesterday. At 1601 K street northwest stands the former Dewey home, where both the Admiral and Mrs. Dewey died. Across the threshold of that home walked the Prince of Wales, who called on Mrs. Dewey in 1919 as she sat proudly alone in the desolation of her widowhood. There, too, came Presidents of the United States to pay their respects and there each 26th day of December gathered the Navy's gallant admirals to congratulate the Navy's hero, George Dewey, on his birthday anniversary.

More than 50 years ago, Washington McLean, of Cincinnati, owner of The Cincinnati Enquirer, came to Washington with his wife, two daughters, Mrs. William R. Hazen, afterwards Mrs. George Dewey, and Mrs. A. H. Bugher, widow of Capt. Bugher, and his son, John R. McLean. They led the way for the winter colony of prominent persons from other cities who were attracted to Washington by the cosmopolitan atmosphere of its social life and the national events constantly transpiring here. Outside of his newspaper enterprise, Mr. McLean had amassed a fortune in the Ohio River steamboat trade.

Builds Elegant Home.

When Mr. McLean built a spacious residence at the northeast corner of Connecticut avenue and K street northwest, afterwards occupied by the American Ambassador and Mrs. William F. Draper and now known as the Draper building, all Washington marvelled at its elegance. At about the same time, he built for Mrs. Hazen and Mrs. Bugher, his daughters, houses in the 1600 block of K street just a square from his home. Mrs. Hazen, afterwards Mrs. Dewey, was given the house at 1601 K street northwest.

After Washington McLean died, both Mrs. Hazen and Mrs. Bugher lived with their widowed mother in what was afterward called the Draper House. The three widows were much admired for their good looks, their wit and their social graces and were favorite guests at brilliant social events.

While living in her home at 1601 K street, Mrs. Hazen first met Dewey, who was not a ranking officer then, but was a friend of Gen. Hazen. A score of years later Dewey, by this time a captain and a Beau Brummel, was in Washington again. His friendship with Mrs. Hazen, who had been a widow for several years by then, was revived. Then the Spanish-American war broke out. Following Manila Bay, a cablegram from Mrs. Hazen, signed "Mildred," aroused widespread speculation, and finally Dewey returned triumphant to Washington.

Mrs. Washington McLean, anxious to honor her daughter's friend and the Nation's hero, offered him the K street residence as his home during his stay in Washington. He accepted.

Then He Proposed.

It was in the McLean house that Dewey proposed to Mrs. Hazen and received her quaint acceptance: "Yes, and thank you, sir!" as she related in later years.

They were married on November 9, 1899.

Their first home was in the famous gift house given by the people to Dewey, on Rhode Island avenue northwest, a few doors from St. Matthew's Church. This gift house

U. S. Workers Perfect Pay Move Tonight

Douglas, Blanton, Lee All Refuse Bids to School Rally.

The drive of organized Government employes for restoration of the 15 per cent pay cut will be crystallized tonight at a mass meeting at Central High School.

Members of Congress, civic leaders, Washington clergymen, labor organizers and officers of veterans' groups will address the gathering, which may be transferred to the stadium if the attendance come up to expectations.

Victory Post of the American Legion, which came out yesterday in unqualified support of the Federal employes' demands, will send its Drum and Bugle Corps of 50 pieces to provide music. Former Senator Rice Means, commander of the District Department of the Legion, is the latest leader to enlist in the drive to restore the 15 per cent cut.

Speakers will include Senator Pat McCarren, of Nevada; Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia; J. P. Frey, of the NRA labor advisory board; Dr. John O'Grady, director of Catholic charities; Harry King, former president of the Washington Chamber of Commerce; James G. Yaden, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, and E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes.

Among those missing from the platform will be three opponents of restoration of the pay cut—Director of the Budget Douglas and Representatives Blanton of Texas and Lee of Missouri, who were invited by organizers of the meeting to present their views. All three declined, but an attempt will be made to arrange debates with the two Representatives before the matter of retaining or restoring the cut comes to a head in January.

Cecil M. Mears, chairman of the organization committee of the District department of the A. F. G. E., is in charge of the meeting, assisted by Miss Margaret Stabler, secretary of the Blue Eagle Lodge, No. 91, of NRA employes, and others.

Boy Is Seriously Hurt In Fall From Truck

An adventurous climb to the rear of a parked department store truck, in front of 613 G street northwest, yesterday caused serious injury to Harry Eugene Sherry, 7, of 722 Sixth street northwest.

The child, who fell from his perch atop the back drop of the vehicle, was in Casualty Hospital last night, suffering from concussion of the brain and severe bruises of his body. Ascending the vehicle, which was idle over Sunday, Harry lost his balance and dropped to the street, police were told.

WRIGLEY FIELD, Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—In a sensational shower of forward passes, the Chicago Bears won the National professional football championship today, beating the New York Giants, 23 to 21, in a battle witnessed by 30,000.

The Bears, trailing, 21 to 16, snatched victory out of the air in the dramatic closing minutes of the game. Billy Karr, right end, who learned his football at West Virginia, plucked a long lateral pass and, eluding two Giants' tackles chasing him in desperate pursuit, galloped 25 yards for the triumphant score.

Bears Take Lead First.

The game was a thrilling combat of forward passing skill, desperate line plunging and gridiron strategy that kept the chilled spectators on their feet in constant excitement. The lead changed hands six times during the furious 60 minutes of play, with first the Bears taking command and then the Giants snatching it away from them.

The game was a revelation to college coaches who advocate no change in the rules. It was strictly an offensive battle with professional rule of allowing passes to be thrown anywhere behind the line of scrimmage, being responsible for nine-tenths of the thrills. The Bears' attack was led by Bronko Nagurski, former University of Minnesota plunging full back, who individually gained 65 yards in 14 attempts and started the pass that was responsible for the winning touchdown. Nagurski was ably assisted by Jack Manders, another former Gopher, who kicked three goals from placement, once for 40 yards, missed another attempt and kicked a goal after touchdown for a total of 10 points.

Newman Pass Hero.

Harry Newman, Michigan's All-American quarter back in 1932, was the outstanding star in the Giants attack. He tossed 17 passes, completing 12 for a total of 201 yards.

Hailed as the greatest offensive teams in professional football, the championship rivals did not waste any time in proving it, although the gridiron was slippery, particularly the grassy spots, because of mist and fog that hung over the field as the game started. Molesworth quick-kicked over Newman's head and gave the Bears their first scoring chance. Strong returned the punt to the Giants' 42-yard line. There Nagurski plucked a pass out of the air and raced to the Giants' 26-yard line. Ronzani slashed right tackle, going to the 15-yard line. Three plays netted only 8 yards, but the ball was placed in a spot for manders to place-kick from the 16-yard line. The ball sailed squarely between the goal posts.

Second Place-Kick.

In the second period, Ronzani tossed a pass to Molesworth, netting the Bears 17 yards and placing the ball on the Giants' 29-yard line. The New York team's defense tightened, but Manders, called upon for the second time to place-kick, booted the oval between the goal posts after a 40-yard effort.

The Giants, stirred to desperation, came back with a touchdown, with Badgro taking Newman's pass and running 29 yards to score. Richards paved the way for the score with a 30-yard drive off left tackle to the Bears' 29-yard line.

The Bears missed another scoring opportunity just before the half ended when Grange got away on a 17-yard gallop, around left end, going to the Giants' 9-yard line. There Manders attempted another field goal, but this time he failed.

G. U. Baseball Job Awarded McCarthy

1930 Hilltop Captain to Coach; Succeeds Clayton Sheedy.

THE selection of Ralph P. McCarthy as baseball coach was announced last night by Georgetown University athletic authorities. He succeeds Clayton Sheedy who resigned several months ago.

Appointment of McCarthy is a popular one both with the undergraduate body and alumni. The new coach has been identified with sports at the Hilltop since 1928, when he won a regular berth on the baseball team. He played three years, leading his mates in batting during his junior and senior years. Elected captain of the 1930 aggregation, McCarthy led Georgetown to one of its most successful campaigns on the diamond, hanging up a record of 28 victories in 33 games, to win undisputed claim to the Eastern collegiate championship.

Native of Massachusetts.

McCarthy is a native of Peabody, Mass., where he attended high school and earned his letter in baseball. He is now enrolled at the Georgetown Medical School. Though the length and terms of his contract were not announced, it is believed that he signed for two years.

Awards to students competing in intra-mural and minor sports at Georgetown were made last night at the tercentenary banquet given by the Rev. Coleman Nevil, S. J., president of the university. Gold footballs, medals and gold baseballs were presented to members of the winning teams in touch football, indoor baseball, handball and tennis.

Those who received awards follow:

Cronin Named All-Time Star By Babe Ruth

Joe Cronin, manager of the Washington Nats, was chosen by Babe Ruth as shortstop on his all-time, all-star baseball team, which the Babe announced last night in a broadcast from New York.

Ruth went strictly modern in his selections and ignored such of baseball's immortals as Lajoie, Wagner, Cobb, Keller, Ruth, Johnson, Young, Mathewson, Waddell, Jackson, Alexander and Collins.

Loughran Has Never Won Over Pacemaker, and Carnera Is One.

By Bill McCormick.

TOMMY LOUGHRAN has never defeated a fighter—big or little — who has set the pace against him. When he squares off against Primo Carnera in their Miami battle next February 22 he will be facing undoubtedly the biggest, and possibly the fastest, heavyweight pacemaker in the ring today.

Loughran has never faced a big man, who took the play away from him. Max Baer, Vittorio Campolo, King Levinsky and the inexperienced Ray Impellettiere all tried to box with the boxing master and woundup on the wrong end of decisions, as did a badly slipping Sharkey in his last fight with Loughran.

In their first fight the Garrulous Gob in one of his rare fighting moods, ignored Philadelphia Tommy's attempts to set the pace and box. He waded through Loughran's feeble punches and battered him so terrifically, that, when in the third round the Philadelphia Dancing Master appealed pathetically to the referee for a place to sit down, that official decided that he was out if not down, and stopped the fight.

Whipped Decisively.

Harry Greb, Jack Delaney and Young Stribling all took the play away from Loughran and whipped him decisively. Steve Hamas tore into the Philadelphia Phantom in their first fight and set him down for the long count in the second round.

Loughran's main sock in trade is a rapier-like left jab, with which he annoys opponents to the point of distraction—if allowed to set the pace. If Carnera allows the Philadelphia Boxing Master to make the pace against him Loughran will be the first fighter granted that privilege by the Gangling Gorgonzola since he absorbed a knowledge of timing from Bill Duffy.

May Be Ineffective.

Most of the action in the Miami bout will undoubtedly find both boys on their toes, with the Philadelphia Phantom trying to get past the Man Mountain's wig-wagging left bludgeon to land his own rapier left jab. This Loughran may or may not do, but even if he does, his punches are liable to prove no more effective against Carnera than a bombardment of ping pong balls against King Kong.

The real story of the fight will be told at close quarters, where Carnera will lean his 265 pounds on

Anderson Interested In Post at N. C. State

Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 17 (AP).—Hunk Anderson, who was not retained as football coach at Notre Dame after the past season, has shown an interest in the vacant coach's post at North Carolina State College.

Dr. Ray R. Sermon, athletic director at North Carolina State, said today that while Anderson had not applied for the post, he "is understood to be considering, making an application."

The alumni-faculty athletic council at State has decided not to renew the contract of John P. "Clipper" Smith as head coach. It will meet Wednesday to consider an application."

Terp Five Host To Michigan Tonight

Open With Veteran Team; Boxers Will Oppose Richmond U.

APPROXIMATELY three-fifths of Washington's collegiate sports fare for this week will be served the patrons tonight. The spotlight flickers down on Richie Coliseum, College Park, where Maryland's veteran basket ball team opens its season against Michigan, and the Old Line boxers climb into the ring with Richmond U.'s hopefuls. American University and Maryland State Normal supply the remainder of the card with a basket ball game on the Eagles' floor.

Michigan will storm into the Coliseum with blood in its eye and a grim determination to take the Terps into camp, for Saturday night it suffered a 32-to-25 loss to Penn at Philadelphia. Flaws were apparent in the Wolverines' dribbling offense, and the cagy Quakers took full advantage of these miscues.

Ted Petroskey Star.

Ted Petroskey, Michigan's superb guard and sensational football player, lived up to advance press notices with a brilliant performance. He led his team in scoring, pocketing two field goals and a quartet of fouls for eight points. Petroskey held Capt. Francis O'Donnell to a single field goal throughout the evening. Ford and Plummer, forwards, and Jablonski, another football star who played center, also were outstanding for the Midwesterns.

Maryland will have a veteran combination to send against the in-

Included in the group that will entrain for the West Tuesday afternoon was Joe Ferrara, tackle, who is still on scholastic probation, but is expected to be declared eligible in time to make the trip. Hockey Star Is Operated On Second Time, Condition Poor

Doctors Put Bailey, Injured Toronto Player, Under Knife for Two Hours; Say That Next 36 Will Tell the Story.

BOSTON, Dec. 17 (AP).—A second emergency operation was performed on Irvin "Ace" Bailey, Toronto Maple Leaf hockey player, shortly after noon today. Later doctors at the City Hospital said his condition was poor.

Bailey suffered a fractured skull last Tuesday night when he was knocked to the ice by Eddie Shore, of the Boston Bruins, during a game at the Boston Garden. X-ray pictures showed that his skull was fractured over the right eye and an emergency operation was performed.

After the operation doctors said "the next 36 hours will tell the story." Bailey's fine physical condition helped him and he showed some improvement until last night. Dr. Donald Munro, Boston brain specialist, decided to operate again and this was done at noon today. The operation took two hours.

An injury on the left side of Bailey's head was more severe than doctors at first believed. Shortly after 2 o'clock, Mrs. Mabel Bailey, the player's wife, and Connie Smythe, manager of the Toronto team, who have been in Boston awaiting a turn in the patient's condition, were summoned to the hospital to confer with Dr. Munro.

Bailey was no worse after the second operation, Dr. Munro said late today in a statement explaining the case; but "it will be touch and go for the next three or four days," the specialist added.

"This morning, his general condition was improved but his intracranial pressure had again gone up," Dr. Munro's statement said. "On that account, and because he was still delirious, which is common in severe brain injuries, and because of the damage on the brain opposite the side on which he was hit, I decided not to wait any longer but operate on the left side.

Operation Lasts Two Hours.

"This was done about 12 o'clock and the operation lasted a little more than two hours. It disclosed the brain more seriously damaged on the left than the right side. In addition, it was evident that there was also an intra-ventricular hemorrhage. (This was explained as fluid in the brain cavities.) This is very rare and usually proves fatal a few hours after the injury.

"Because of these findings, I am unable to be any more definite as to the ultimate outcome. It will be touch and go for the next three or four days. He now has sub temporal decompressions on both sides of his head. So far, he is no worse for the operation."

California Open Won by Diegel

Lakewood Country Club, Long Beach, Calif., Dec. 17 (AP).—Leo Diegel, professional from the Philmont Country Club, Philmont, Pa., won the California open golf championship today, shooting a 282 for 72 holes, 6 strokes under par.

Diegel finished in the dusk with a sparkling 69 to lead the field by four strokes.

Tied for second place were Olin Dutra, of Santa Monica, Calif., another former P. G. A. champion, and Ky Laffoon, of Denver, with cards of 286. Fourth place went to Willie Hunter, of Los Angeles, with 287, still one stroke to the good under par for this lake strewn course.

Ben Coltrin, of San Francisco, who started in the lead Friday finished fifth, with 288.

The bulky Packer aggregation broke the Gunners' string of ten successive victories and inflicted the second defeat of the season on St. Louis.

Batting Off In American League

Foxx's Average of .356 Lowest Top Mark in 25 Years.

BASEBALL fans probably will find plenty of debating points in the 1933 American League batting averages, released this moring. It is admitted that there is much rabbit in the pellet, yet averages all along the line are lower than in the past, opening up the question as to whether the present crop of swatsmiths is as good as those of the past or whether it is just a case of generally improved pitching in the league.

Batting in the league declined 4 points, from .277 to .273, with the champion Washington Club taking team-honors with a .287. The runner-up Athletics led the 1932 hitting race with a .290.

Foxx Hit For .356.

The batting decline was more noticeable in the individual figures. Jimmy Foxx, who won his first league batting championship, did so with a .356 mark, the lowest top average in 25 years and the fourth lowest in league history. The Athletics' brawny first-sacker, by the way, led in both plain and fancy hitting. He laced out 48 homers to lead in this respect for the second successive season and for the second year in a row his total bases went beyond the 400 figure.

Playing Macbeth to Foxx's Hamlet was Heinie Manush, the Nats' big left fielder. He was second in hitting, with .336; led the league in base hits, 221; cracked out the most triples, 17, and had the two longest consecutive game hitting streaks of the year, one of 33 and another of 28.

Joe Cronin was the only other Nat to top in any respect, although Joe Kuhel's .322 figure placed him in the "leading ten." The Washington Club's skipper had the most doubles to his credit, 45. Ben Chapman, of the Yanks, nosed out Gerald Walker, of the Tigers, for stolen base honors, 27 to 26, while Mule Haas, of the Chisox, had the most sacrifices, 30.

Six Nats Top .300.

Six Nat players hit .300 or better. Following Manush's .336 and Kuhel's .322 come Pilot Cronin .309 and Buddy Myer .302 among the regulars. Cliff Bolton and Cecil Travis were utility players in the elite class, but neither played in many games. Bolton had the highest mark in the league, .410, but was only at bat 39 times. Travis has a .302 to show for his efforts.

The Washington team was charged with the most times at bat and made the most hits, but trailed both the Yankees and Athletics in run-scoring. On the other hand, the Nats held opponents to the fewest runs, 665, an average of 4.35 per game.

The Nats led in triples, 86, had the most suicides, 128, and equalled a left on base record for a single game when 18 were stranded against Chicago on June 22. Philadelphia hit the most doubles, with the New York Yankees hitting the most homers, driving in the most runs, and credited with the most thefts.

Dartmouth Grid Job Is Still Open

Hanover, N. H., Dec. 17 (U.P.).—The Dartmouth Athletic Council adjourned its two-day meeting here today without reaching a decision on who would succeed Jackson L. Cannell, whose resignation as coach of varsity football was accepted last night.

A list of 60 candidates for the job was considered by the council and it was said to be improbable that one will be picked in time for the council's next meeting, scheduled for early January. Between now and January members of the council expect to gather more information about coaching possibilities.

It was understood that the group took no stand either for or against alumni coaching. President Clarence G. McDavitt said no names had been dropped from the list of suggestions. Conferences were devoted largely to laying a general groundwork than to discussing personalities, he said. The council lacked time, he added, to do more than survey alumni and undergraduate opinion and to formulate general principles regarding coaching.

2,000 See Mohawks Drive to Last Period-Touchdown to Beat Mercurys, 6-0

Two Passes, Penalty Aid In Attack

Mercs, Early in Game, Reach 8-Yard Line; Fail to Tally.

BY VIRTUE of a 15-yard penalty and the line drives of Snail Delabre, a veteran Mohawk eleven yesterday squeezed out a 6-0 victory over an ambitious Mercury aggregation in the fourth period of a bitterly contested game for the city football championship. Some 2,000 spectators peered at the game through the pea-soup fog that enveloped the Gonzaga field.

Early in the first quarter, the Mercury eleven, bolstered by the presence of McCarver, Baker, Stewart, and Neilson of George Washington, gave indications of giving the Hawks a beating. From the 30-yard line, McCarver lateraled to Baker, who was downed on the Mercury 8-yard line. On the next play, Baker was smeared on a pass for a 20-yard loss by Reynolds.

Mohawk Line Holds.

Hoof then passed to McCarver on the 11-yard line and there the Mercs were held by the cagey and experienced Mohawk aggregation. The balance of the initial period was played in midfield. The second quarter was largely devoted to a kicking duel between Kiska and Byrne. In the third quarter Delabre started driving through the line for consistent gains, but the Hawks were unable to push the ball into the end zone.

In the final quarter, with 5 minutes to play, Lewis, substituting for Kiska, talked before play was resumed and a 15-yard penalty was exacted against the Mercurys, bringing the ball from midfield to the 35-yard line. A 15-yard pass from Byrne to Price and then yet another brought the ball to the 5-yard line, from where it was pushed over by Delabre. Byrne failed from placement for the point after touchdown.

Final Voting on Winner Will Be Confined to This Group.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (AP).—The Sullivan Memorial Award committee of the Amateur Athletic Union today announced it had reduced the number of nominations for the 1933 award to ten and that the final voting would be confined to them.

They included Bill Bonthron, of Princeton, and Glenn Cunningham, of Kansas, middle distance runners; Keith Brown, of Yale, pole vaulter; Glen Hardin, of Louisiana State University, and Johnny Morriss, of the Southwestern Louisiana A. C., hurdlers; Clarence De Mar, of Keene, N. H., veteran marathoner; Patrick J. McDonald, weight man, who won the Olympic shot-put title as long ago as 1912; Ralph Metcalfe, of Marquette, American sprint champion; Alfred Joihim, Swiss Turnverein, New York, gymnast, and Lenore Kight, Homestead, Pa., free style swimming ace, the only woman on the final list.

Bausch Won in 1932.

Final selection of the winner of the award rests with the A. A. U. tribunal comprising more than 600 leaders in sport. The award is made annually to the outstanding amateur athlete of the year. Jim Bausch, Olympic decathlon champion, won in 1932.

In announcing the ten nominations, the A. A. U. pointed out that at the annual A. A. U. convention a year ago it had been decided that only those athletes who participate in sports under the jurisdiction of the A. A. U. or one of the bodies allied with it, should be eligible for the award.

Carnera Sets His Own Pace

Loughran's slender 187-pound chassis and sap his stamina with short blows. A few rounds of stumbling around the ring with the Stupendous Stooge's carcass draped around his shoulders and Philadelphia Tommy will be softened up like a wrestler's brain—ready to recline gracefully on the canvas and count the cocoanuts on the Florida palm trees while the referee counts ten.

Sekyra Counterpart.

The New York Boxing Commission once refused to allow Carnera, then building up a "knockout record," to make a sacrificial victim of Joe Sekyra, on the grounds that the Dayton Schoolboy was too small for the Ambling Alp. Sekyra is almost an exact counterpart of Loughran in every physical respect, and he has battled Philadelphia Tommy to many nip-and-tuck decisions, none of which he was awarded officially, but all close enough to be debatable.

Sekyra is Loughran's equal in size, stamina and ringmanship and his left hand is as good or better than the Philadelphian's. If a bout between Sekyra and a not-so-good Carnera was too one-sided for New York, what is a bout between Loughran and a vastly improved, world champion Carnera in Florida?

Spencer Brothers Victors In Beaver Dam Match

Playing in a heavy fog that forced virtually every shot in the fairways to be played blindly, Cliff Spencer, pro, and his brother-assistant, Carroll, trounced the combination of Martin F. McCarthy, club champion, and Jess Baggett, yesterday at the Beaver Dam Country Club in a special match, 4 and 3.

Holding the whip hand through most of the first nine and all of the incoming side, the professionals led 2 up at the turn. Cliff shot a 72, even par, and Carroll a 76, and together they had a best ball of 69. The amateurs had a best ball of 73 and each scored a 77.

We Want Screwy Wrasslers

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (Spl.).—There is a movement on foot in Philadelphia to test the sanity of Everett Marshall, the Colorado cowboy wrestler who precipitated a riot in a Philadelphia ring during his bout with Jim Londos by swinging on the referee, his manager and several of the private gendarmes employed by the management. The Pennsylvania Athletic Commission has ruled that Marshall must be examined by three alienists to determine whether his mentality is such as to justify his appearance in Keystone State rings.

I wish to go on record as being violently opposed to this and to say that neither I nor my stringing, trenchant, crusading pen will rest until this ugly head of sanity that is rearing itself above the wrestling horizon is scotched beneath the heel of the torch of truth. If the notion promulgated by the Pennsylvania commission becomes general it means the end of wrestling in this country, and you all know what that means. I don't have to tell you. I know that you and you and you do not wish to face the end of wrestling and everything that that entails.

I do not wish to sound unduly like an alarmist but, if the prize fight and wrestling commissions put through sanity tests for the athletes, it will be no time at all before promoters are included, the next move will be to include wrestling and sports writers. And after that, what? Inflation. Free silver. Rule by the farmers. But it is not with the future that I am concerned as much as with the immediate present. And I do not know of any other writer today with the courage to prepare or print the truth. How many of the present day wrestlers do you believe could pass the sanity test? Then join me in fighting this new menace to liberty and happiness fostered by political bureaucrats. Write to your congressman. Write to your wrestling promoter. You are entitled to your wrestlers balmy. Insist upon it. If you don't, I will.

Some of the happiest recollections of my life are from wrestling shows I have attended in the past at New York's Madison Square Garden. There was the evening when Leon Pinetzki, the Polish giant, who is really a German, was wrestling Fritz Kley, the contortionist, another German.. Leon and I were very friendly and used to carry on pleasant conversations in his native tongue during his bouts.. Leon got a Full Nelson on Kley, but Fritz threw both his arms out of joint at the shoulder sockets and slid gracefully between Leon's legs. A look of bafflement came over Pinetski's face, since nothing but Kley's hands were left in his grasp. He shuffled over to where I was sitting and said earnestly—"Woist er den verschwunden?" meaning—"Where did he disappear to?"

As a reporter, it was my my duty to remain neutral and preserve Herr Kley's secret, but as a friend I felt it my duty to advise Leon that Fritz was hiding behind him. This so upset Pinetzki that he dashed Kley's hands from his grasp, crossed to the other side of the ring, put his head down on his arm on the top rope and sobbed. Kley thereupon leaped onto his back, crawled around on his scapula and finally hid again, this time beneath his armpit. Pinetzki staggered around the ring beating his brow with his clenched fist, appealing first to the referee and then to me, "Der man versteckt sich immer an mir." "The man is always hiding himself from me."

At this juncture some maniac in the gallery yelled, "Look in your vest pocket." Leon had a lot of stuff that looked like Russian Pony, or maybe it was Astrakhan, on his chest and he solemnly investigated the denser sections, but didn't succeed in finding his opponent. At this point we all had a good cry.

Now, I maintain that with sanity tests for wrestlers such divine and spiritual moments will no longer be possible.

No sanity commission or committee of alienists would pass Master Samuel Stein, whose specialty is hurling himself head first from the ring onto concrete floors and into steel-and-wooden benches.

How are you going to convince the medicos that there are no bats in the belfry of some wrestler named Rxjkslycinski, or something like that, who took a dislike to my face and kept throwing his opponent at me all through the evening? I was too quick for him and kept ducking, to his increasing fury. Finally, his opponent, much used up, was unable to return to the ring and he found himself out of ammunition.

Baffled and snarling for only a moment, a great gleam came into his eyes. He picked up the referee and came over with the arbiter poised to chuck at my head. At this point I had to pull a gun and shoot him. I have the pelt mounted up in my studio. I'd like to have you come up and look at it some time. Sanity tests indeed.

Grid Revisions Not Needed —Hardell

Better All-Round Eleven Wins Under Present Rules, He Says.

By Chick Kenny.

"THE football rules as they now stand need not be revised or changed."

So says Elmer P. ("Hap") Hardell, football coach of McKinley Tech High School and one of the foremost authorities and teachers of the game in the District.

Hardell was asked his opinions of the suggestions offered the rules committee of the Eastern Association of the intercollegiate football officials, in Saturday's conclave.

"Under the present rules, the better coached and better all-around team wins."

Touchback Rule.

Hardell maintains that a forward pass grounded in the end zone should still be ruled a touchback instead of the loss of a down.

The officials recommend that a forward pass grounded in the end zone should not be ruled a touchback except when the grounded pass comes on the fourth down.

The fiery Tech coach further suggests that the potency of the offensive team should not be disturbed. The offensive team has all the chances and equipment to display its power and the edge, as interpreted by the rules, is not with the defense, he says.

"The revision in the sideline zone rule, that of increasing the zone from 10 to 15 yards, is an excellent idea, as it brings the ball and consequently the play more to the center of the playing field," Hardell declares. He thinks the goal posts should stay where they are. He points out that the lost art of field goal kicking, which has been laying dormant for the last decade or so has finally returned to its place in the game. The season just passed has shown that, he states.

"Look at the field goals that were kicked this year, and in big games at that," he states. "Plenty of field goal kicking practice is all that is needed and let the goal posts stay where they will."

Favors Wider Field.

Hap does make a suggestion in the playing dimensions of the field, but he knows that such an idea is purely out of the question. "If the playing fields were wider, there would be more lateral passing, which would indeed open up the game to a large extent. But the fact remains that most large stadia have imbedded cinder tracks encircling the field and the possibility of a change of this sort is a possibility but certainly not a probability.

"Forward passing as the pros use it (anywhere behind the line of scrimmage) with short heaves over the line would be an interesting added threat to football offense that should be given some thought by the rule makers.

"But the football rules as they now stand, need not be revised or changed."

Maryland Plays Michigan Team

vaders. Rufus Vincent, center; "Spider" Chase and Bob Snyder, forwards; and the Buscher brothers, Bucky and Bernie, guards; have been named as the starting team.

Maryland State Normal's surprise win over Gallaudet Friday indicates that American's green quintet probably will have a real battle tonight. Coach Walter Young sorely misses Oscar Sells and Lionel Dick, stalwarts of the 1932 combination. The current team is compared of Howard Reinard and Ed Porter, forwards; Harold Sampson, center; Stan Dove and Mel Wheately, guards. Bob McRae and Marty Allwin, Washington boys, also are likely to break into the game.

New York Avenue-Virginia Avenue, unfinished.

HEAVY fog and heavy ground conditions prevailed here yesterday, but did not prevent District soccerists from completing a schedule of seven games—two as the District and Southeastern Association championship opened for The Post's Trophy, another pair in the Recreation Lague, and three in the Capital City League.

As anticipated, Mitchell's Store overcame Brandywine, in a cup-tie game that was outstanding for good, clean playing. The winners failed to exhibit their usual dash, and were much bothered by the tactics of the opposing backs in putting the Mitchell forwards in an offside position. A. Duvall and Roberts showed up nicely for the losers.

Miller's Team Wins.

With only nine players, the smart young Miller Furniture team not only managed to hold the Hispano-Americans, but to finally beat them, 2-0, in the other cup-tie game.

There was quite a scoring festival at Gaithersburg, where the home team, for the second time this season, drew with Rockville in the Capital City League. The Senators nosed out the German-Americans, at Benning, 2-1, while Marlboro got an early lead on the British United at the Monument grounds and held it all the way, to win, 2-1. The British goal came in the closing minutes.

Starting with nine men—as several other teams did—the British had many good chances during the first half but lacked a punch when within shooting range. The game dragged and the Britishers tired in the second half, although Talbott had several spectacular saves. Burton, Turner and Malloch were best for the losers, the Marlboro defense taking the honors on the winning side.

Takoma Beats Dux.

The only game finished in the Recreation League was won by Takoma Park, Riley scoring in the last two minutes to let his team win, 1-0, from Dux.

This was another close affair from the opening kick-off, and Dux surprised its opponents with a strong and determined defense.

Fights for Life

BOB WILSON.

Robert Wilson, jr., 24, former Western High School and University of Maryland star athlete, was operated on yesterday afternoon at Montgomery County Hospital, Sandy Spring, Md., following an accident earlier in the day in which his automobile skidded and crashed into a telegraph pole at Glenmont, Md. Young Wilson suffered a fractured skull and minor bruises.

He was accompanied by his father, Robert Wilson, sr., who suffered an injured leg and cuts about the face, but was not considered to be in a serious condition.

The hospital authorities reported last night that young Wilson was still unconscious.

Hagen, Manich On Mat Card Thursday

Meet in 30-Minute Limit Preliminary on Bill at Auditorium.

HARD-BOILED GEORGE HAGEN, former Marine and one of the most colorful rasslers ever to show here, returns to an Auditorium setting under the auspices of Joe Turner Thursday night. night.

He is cast against George Manich in a 30-minute time limit preliminary to the Gino Garibaldi-Jim Clinstock main event.

Though several notches removed from the championship bracket, both Hagen and Manich are numbered among the mat's better crowd pleasers.

Chance to Move Up.

Gino Garibaldi's stepping out as an independent is a gratifying move insofar as Washingtonians are concerned. The temperamental Italian will qualify for the Brownings, Lewises, Savoldis et al. if he gets by Clinstock.

Montgomery Fives Face Six Contests

Bethesda-Chevy Chase to Meet Roosevelt Today.

Montgomery County quintets see action in six contests this week, with Coach Bride's Silver Springers leading the way with three battles.

Bethesda-Chevy Chase will seek its third win in five games when it meets Roosevelt at Leland today, and will play Thursday night against the Alumni five also at home.

Takoma-Silver Spring will be the guests of Roosevelt tomorrow and Western Wednesday, and with the Marylanders yet to see victory in two games they will be thirsty for a win over their closest District rivals. They also will stack up against an all-star Alumni quintet Thursday night.

Rockville meets Mount Rainier at the county seat on Friday in addition to two practice games with county fives this week.

Other schools in the league will wait until after the holidays to resume competition with opponents out of the league.

Ft. Humphreys Lists Boxing Show Tonight

The boxing season will be ushered in at Fort Humphreys tonight at 8:30. Lieut. Trench is in charge of the bouts and has arranged seven three-round matches. All of the participants are stationed at the post, but in the future the post fighters will probably mix with some outside organizations.

The bouts will be held in the Engineers Theater and a small entrance fee will be charged, the proceeds of which will go to the athletic fund.

Mercury Five Downs Company F Regulars

Both Company F Regulars and Reserves suffered basket ball defeats yesterday on the National Guard Armory court at Hyattsville. Mercury A. C., of Washington, conquered the Guard first team, 28-15, and the College Park Independents drubbed the Reserves, 47-9.

Harry Pollock Is a Suicide On Coast

SAN DIEGO, Calif., Dec. 17 (AP). Harry M. Pollock, 59, sports promoter and manager of Freddie Welsh when Welsh was lightweight champion of the world, shot himself to death early today, police said.

The body was found in the driveway of his home.

One bullet penetrated Pollock's head, the police surgeon said. Friends reported there was no apparent motive.

Born in Baltimore, Pollock spent his early years in Washington, D. C., and New York and was a sports writer on New York newspapers for several years.

Jenkins' Manager.

He was manager for "Ham" Jenkins, who held the world heavyweight wrestling championship before Frank Gotch won the title; was manager of Madison Square Garden for 12 years, introduced six-day bicycle racing in the big indoor stadium, and was associated in various sporting ventures with Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight boxing champion, and his former manager, Jack Kearns.

Pollock managed the Olympic Auditorium in Los Angeles, scene of wrestling and boxing shows, from 1923 to 1925, and later was connected with Tia Juana and Agua Caliente sports enterprises.

Planned Pro Venture.

Pollock returned to San Diego ten days ago from New York and announced he would promote professional football in California in 1934. He was promoting a professional game to be played in Los Angeles next month.

Pollock's mother, Mrs. Anna C. Pollock, of New York City; a daughter Dorothy Pollock, of Glenwood Landing, N. Y., and two sisters, Mrs. Theodore Rhoades, New York City, and Miss Alice Pollock, Washington, survive.

Miller Five Plays Marions Tonight

Two Other Games Slated at Hine School.

A hard fought game is expected tonight at Hine Junior High School in the Southeast Community Center League when the Miller Furniture Co. and Marion A. C. quintets take the floor.

The Millers have assembled a team they hope will win the A. A. U. tournament this year. They were runners-up last year. The Marions are out to hand the Millers their first trimming in the first half of the league schedule.

Two other games of importance in the Class B section will be contested. Sigma Phi Lambda, which has yet to lose a game, will stack up against the Certified Bakers at 8 o'clock, and Congress Heights will compete with the Easton A. C. at 7. The big game, Millers and Marions, will go on at 9.

Ping Pong Tournament Booked to Open Tonight

The Class "B" District ping pong championship will open tonight at 8:15 o'clock at 1510 H street northwest, with a field of 32 contestants entered. Play will be resumed through tomorrow night. Post entries will be accepted.

Plumbers Would Play.

The Bovello Plumber five wants to arrange games with 145-pound and unlimited basket ball teams. The Bovellos have the use of the Peck gym on Monday nights and the former 125-pound A. A. U. champs also desire to book games with nearby Maryland and Virginia teams. Call Manager Desmond, Columbia 7237 or Adams 6339-W.

High School Highlights

ORRELL MITCHELL, coach of Gonzaga Prep basket ball team, may ask Eastern to cancel the game for Thursday, due to the fact that several of his ace courtmen have important roles in a Christmas play. Tom Roach, captain and center of the Purple five, will take the part of a villian, Santa Claus or Dick Dare—Mitchell doesn't know which. He does know, though, that his team would feel keenly the loss of Roach.

Cancellation of the game would leave the Lincoln Parkers in somewhat of a hole, as Thursday's game has been billed as a major act in Alumni Reunion Day.

Waverly Wheeler, Knocky Thomas and Ollie Tipton, the trio that make up most of the Emerson Institute basket attack, are slated for the University of Maryland next fall. The Fenlon lads, who are coming along nicely with the same team, are booked for either George Washington or Catholic U., with accent on the latter.

Central High's outstanding basket ball jaunt out of town this season is slated for Saturday, when the Mount Pleasant team is slated to meet Trenton, N. J., High School.

A small but interesting line-up of court games is listed for today, with Central meeting Georgetown Prep at Garrett Park; Roosevelt showing at Bethesda-Chevy Chase and Western clashing with Emerson Institute on the Western floor.

Barry Managers Determined to Have Him at Best for Rugirello Tomorrow

D. C. Fighter Trains in Gotham

To Come Here at Last Minute; Will Be Well Guarded.

Rugirello Brings Fine Record as KKnockout Artist Here.

THE handlers of Donald "Reds" Barry are determined that his fight with Salvatore Rugirello at Portner's tomorrow night shall not prove a repetition of the numerous fiascos that have studded their charge's local ring career. To insure the Southeast redhead's arrival at the ringside in condition to go the 10 rounds against his gigantic opponent at top speed, they last week removed him from the wiles of Washington to the gymnasiums of gay Gotham to apply the finishing touches to his training.

Realizing that there is many a slipt twixt the gym and the ring, the New York branch of Barry Managers, Inc., will detain the auburn-thatched one in their territory until the eleventh hour, when he will be placed under escort and transported to Washington posthaste. His arrival here will be timed to effect delivery to Patsy Donovan, vice president and treasurer of Barry Managers, Inc., at exactly 4 p. m.

Steak to Bolster Spirits.

At 4:05 p. m., Vice President and Treasurer Donovan will conduct Barry to the food emporium of C. Egbert ("Fats") Cornell, president and Chief of Commissary of Barry Managers, Inc., where his spirits will be bolstered by the customary juicy prefight steak.

At 4:45 p. m., or as soon thereafter as Barry tires of tearing steak under the eagle-eyed vigilance of President and Chief of Commissary Cornell and Vice President and Treasurer Donovan, the Southeast firecracker will be taken under heavy gurad to a cloistered, secluded spot for the usual prefight nap, which will last until he is aroused to enter the ring, even if Cornell and Donovan are forced to conk him on the noggin with the baseball bats they will have poised for action throughout his retirement in the arms of Morpheus.

Arriving at the ringside, their efforts may be nullified in short order by Rugirello, who has established himself as a first-class nullifier of precaution by the simple expedient of laying opponents in a horizontal position with knockout punches.

Foe Boasts Fine Record.

He has knocked out Walter Cobb, conqueror of Marty Gallagher, in one round, Stanley Poreda, who defeated Primo Carnera, in seven rounds and boasts of a 20-round draw with Larry Gaines, to whom Carnera also bowed. Following the Gaines draw, which was ground out in England, the referee giving the decision was suspended by the British boxing moguls, who thought that Rugirello should have been declared the winner.

A six-round preliminary between Henry Irving and Benny Edell and a six between Big Boy Smith and Walter Kirkwood will, with two four-rounders, complete the card. The fours offer Baby Charles against Joe Raspi and Roma La Bona opposed to Wild Bill Howell.

Tanforan Race Meeting Nets Loss of $50,000

San Bruno, Calif., Dec. 17 (AP).—Noah's pride again came through on the stretch today to win the feature race in the closing day of the 41-day meet at Tanforan. The winner nosed out Dis Dat, which placed second and Al Jolson, who ambled in third.

The time on the heavy track was 1 minute 12 1-5 seconds, for the 170 feet less than 6 furlongs. Noah's Pride paid on $2 mutuels $12.20, $5 and $3.60.

President Henry C. Russell, president, announced the track had lost about $50,000 during the meet.

Strange as It Seems

—By John Hix

The greatest winning streak in football history was made in 1899 by the University of the South Eleven, Sewanee, Tenn. The team, champions of the South that year, began its phenomenal run on Thursday of one week, and by Tuesday of the next it had played five games in five different towns, with a net result of five victories, 101 points scored, and no points scored on them.

They began on November 9 against Texas U. at Austin with a 12-0 victory. Friday they shut out Texas A. and M. at Houston, 10-0. Saturday Tulane was taken, 23-0. They rested up on Sunday, then won, 34-0, over Louisiana State U. on Monday. Tuesday they played Mississippi at Memphis, winning, 12-0. Just to prove they were not played out, they took on Cumberland at Sewanee less than a week later and won, 71-0. Sewanee won every game that year, 12 in all, with a total score of 327 against 10.

Following his father's footsteps, but at a much earlier time in his life, William Pitt, the younger, became prime minister of England in 1783, when he was only 24 years old. His first ministry lasted 17 years, then, after a period of 3 years, he again became prime minister for another three years. Pitt matriculated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, when he was 14. At 21 he was admitted to the bar, and the same year was elected to the Parliament.

Within two years he was offered vice treasurership of Ireland, a position which he refused, asserting he would accept nothing but a cabinet post. Later that year he was made chancellor of the exchequer.

with Bill Bennings.

Charles Town Race Track, Dec. 17.

Dear Joe:

Stewards have suspended two jockeys for unsatisfactory rides. That disgraceful effort of Wahoo on Friday has brought a ban for the remainder of the meeting to Jockey Frank Catrone, and Jockey Jim Byrne has been set down, pending investigation of The Bard's race yesterday, in which the horse ran well up at the start and then drifted back through the field. Wahoo, winner of two straight, ran next to last after being installed the favorite. Catrone claims that Wahoo broke with a twitch rope dangling in his face, and that the horse almost fell at the first turn. He admitted that he did not persevere with Wahoo after his mount apparently had lost all chance. Wahoo is entered in tomorrow's seventh race and should be bet. Don Pedro's dull race at Bowie, which brought the suspension of Jockey McCleary, was followed by a winning effort next out.

BILL.

First race—Forceful is the logical pick in this five-furlong sprint. Ran a bang-up race to Niggertoe last out, despite the fact that Jockey Snyder lost a stirrup and had a foot dangling most of the way. Was worked on the slow track yesterday morning. Bungalow has been close recently and deserves second call. Big Dipper would be dangerous if moved off the also-eligible list.

Second race—I prefer Forest Faun in this sprint. Races before being shipped here indicate a lot of speed, and some of it was shown on top of that field in a distance race the other day. The possibility of an off track should help this one. Aella has the better post position and is the one to beat. Beau Cavalier was poorly ridden last out.

Third race—Suspicious tumbled with Jockey Knapp last out, but both horse and rider escaped injury. Previously, Suspicious outclassed a field of about the caliber draw tomorrow. She has the necessary foot to go to the front and appears best. Rod Rock was never better and was shelved while awaiting a soft track. May surprise tomorrow. Duellist moves up on off tracks and is dangerous.

Fourth race—Silverdale was away poorly last out and had little chance in the race. The son of Porter is sharp as a tack as those two victories here reveal. Soft going should be to his advantage. Westy Junior will have Thurber in the saddle and is the one to beat. However, that outside post position holds too many hazards. Dornoch moves up a peg but has demonstrated rare ability of late.

Fifth race—Hut may prove the surprise of this mile and a sixteenth contest. I saw him in his last effort, burning up ground in the stretch after a ragged trip around the course. I'm taking my chance on the possibility of Black Target and Energetic Boy running each other into the ground.

Sixth race—Calgary Kay comes off a winning sprint to try a distance and appears to be ready for a winning race in a field of this sort. Royal Lassie is vastly improved and has two wins to her credit. Bokie B for the rest.

Seventh race—Electric Gaff is far too sharp and consistent to be placed anywhere except on the top of this heap. King Bird and The Doctor for the rest.

Florida Tracks Foreseeing Good Year

79 Days Racing in Sight; Tropical Park Opens on December 30.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 17 (AP).—With the stables filling at the rate of nearly 200 horses a week, trackmen at Florida's two ovals are confident winter racing will come into its own this season.

Banished, they claim, is the old bogey that winter running weakens the thoroughbreds for the summer campaigns—a belief that has deprived the winter tracks of many of the country's leading horses.

Already in the sheds are horses from the stables of Mrs. Payne Whitney, Col. E. R. Bradley, Mrs. H. C. Phipps, Mrs. Dodge Sloan, Joseph E. Widener and others of equal prominence in the racing world.

79 Days of Racing.

Florida has 79 days of racing in sight, opening with Tropical's inaugural December 30, and closing at the same track on April 1. The Coral Gables race course splits its season, ending the first semester January 24, and resuming again on March 18.

Hialeah Park opens its gates January 28 and continues 45 days without a break.

Stakes at Hialeah.

Hialeah Park stakes include the $2,500 Inaugural Handicap, for 3-year-olds and up, 6 furlongs, January 25; $2,500 Hialeah Stakes, 3-year-olds and up, 6 furlongs, February 3; $2,500 Miami Beach Handicap, 3-year-olds, 1 mile, February 10.

The $2,500 Bahamas Handicap, 3-year-olds, 7 furlongs, February 17; $2,000 Nursery Stakes, No. 1, for 2-year-old colts and geldings, 2 furlongs, February 24; $3,000 Jockey Club Handicap, for 3-year-olds and up, 1 1-16 miles, March 3; $2,000 Nursery Stakes, No. 2, for 2-year-old fillies, 3 furlongs, March 10; $2,500, Hialeah Juvenile Championship, for 2-year-olds, 3 furlongs March 17, and the $10,000 Florida Derby, for 3-year-olds, 1¼ miles, March 24.

Tropical Park events have not been announced.

New Deal Born At Bethlehem, Says Coughlin

Its Principles Have Brought Back Christmas Spirit, Priest Asserts.

Detroit, Dec. 17 (AP).—The Rev. Father Charles E. Coughlin, pastor of the Shrine of the Little Flower, said in a speech today that the New Deal was born at Bethlehem 1,933 years ago and that its principles have come down unchanged through the ages.

He said these principles, based on the doctrine of charity, run counter to "the diabolical philosophy of selfishness" which he said has dominated mankind.

The address was broadcast over a hook-up of independent radio stations.

Father Coughlin said this Christmas season, because of the New Deal which he called also "The Christmas Deal," is "truly a season of peace" after four years of depression.

Mentioning briefly reasons for his statement that this Christmas is a happier one, Father Coughlin said, "at no time during the last four years has there been such promise of prosperity. At no time has there been less serious social disturbance."

Father Coughlin remarked that after the Christmas holiday "Congress will convene and the battle will be on."

The gold standard and its philosophy are, Father Coughlin said, waiting "to hear sentence passed." He predicted that "the prison walls of obscurity await them."

Auction Spells End Of the Dewey Era

was sold by Admiral Dewey's son, George G. Dewey, after his father's death and was converted into the Dewey Building. At one time this was the most talked of house in America, for Admiral Dewey shortly after his marriage deeded it to his wife, arousing a tremendous public outcry.

The facts were that Admiral Dewey was not giving the house to Mrs. Dewey. At her suggestion, he was deeding it to his son in order that it would not be part of his estate in which she or her heirs might claim a dower interest. In the midst of the transaction, when the house was to have been redeeded by Mrs. Dewey to the Admiral's son, one of Dewey's own employes betrayed his confidence and released the story to the newspapers.

Makes House Curiosity.

This publicity was not only distasteful and unpleasant to the Deweys but made the house the sight-seeing center of Washington. Tourists guides would shout its story from the street to the curious; people constantly tried to inspect the house on one pretext or another until finally Admiral and Mrs. Dewey went to live in Mrs. Dewey's home at 1601 K street northwest, where both remained until they died.

At 1601 K street the admiral received gifts and messages of good will. Every notable who came to Washington for the next 15 years found his way to the Dewey house. There Mrs. Dewey assembled for the admiral the decorations, medals, gifts of all sorts and descriptions in two huge gilt curio cabinets that were sold last week, after some difficulty, for less than $25 each.

The house at 1601 K street is of dark red brick with double bay windows and a door a trifle below the level of the sidewalk. The big room on the English basement floor was used by Admiral Dewey as a reading room and office and a smoking room for gentlemen guests at dinner parties. On the west side was a stately drawing room lined with Dewey mementoes and souvenirs and beautifully furnished. The music room back of it was a treasure house of valuable paintings and photographs, and under a large mirror on a table was the inscribed box which held the sword, handsomely mounted in gold and jewels, presented by Congress to Admiral Dewey for the American people. Mrs. Dewey, after the admiral died, placed the sword at the foot of her bed every night.

On the left side of the drawing-room floor was a pleasant double library and the dining room. At the rosewood library table Admiral Dewey wrote his reports. Another part of the library was the table which had been used by Lincoln in the White House and had been purchased by Washington McLean and given to his daughter, Mrs. Dewey.

Always Dined in State.

In the dining room meals were served in state even if only the admiral and his wife were present. Mrs. Dewey kept this custom after the admiral's death. The admiral's chair was kept draped in black.

Admiral and Mrs. Dewey were both fond of the tiny garden on the Sixteenth street side of their house. They spent many happy hours planning and directing the gardener there.

The funeral of Admiral Dewey was held from the K street house in January, 1917. Outside the house waited the entire midshipmen regiment from Annapolis to act as guard of honor in accordance to a wish once expressed by Admiral Dewey. In the big drawing room gathered President Wilson, diplomats, high ranking officers of the Army and Navy.

And from the doors of her beloved home at 1601 K street on February 24, 1931, the mortal remains of Mrs. Dewey were taken to Washington Cathedral for interment beside her distinguished husband.

Dillinger Gang Escapes Again

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—Bristling with guns, 100 policemen today raided two supposed hideouts of the John Dillinger gang of escaped Indiana convicts.

Arthur (Fish) Johnson and Miss Helen Burke, said by Detective Lieut. Charles Welling to be acquaintances of the gangsters, were arrested.

At an apartment house, where eight men and four women had occupied four apartments since December 8, police found their quarry had fled during the night. An address book found in the place led officers to a second apartment farther down the street which was likewise found deserted.

The manager of the second place said it had been occupied by a girl and a man answering Dillinger's description. At the first place visited attaches selected a picture of Harry Pierpont as resembling one of the occupants.

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Vivian Charles, 7, was burned to death early today in a fire that destroyed three upper stories of a tenement house on Lenox avenue.

Twelve Negro families fled in their night clothes, and three firemen and one tenant were injured.

"DERE CAP — MY LEG IS GETTING BETTER AN' TH' DOCTOR SAYS MEBBE THEY WILL TAKE TH' PLASTER CAST OFF THIS WEEK! — I LIKE TH' DOCTOR — HE SAYS PRITTY SOON I WILL BE AS GOOD AS NEW — "

Walt Mason Himself

Worth While.

We buy the airy tales of crooks which don't make bosoms bleed, for all the truly worth while books are painful things to read. They make of life a said affair, a dismal, ghastly thing, and disillusion and despair are what they strive to bring. When some one recommends a book that's surely worth my while, I buy it and I say, "Gadzook, in this there'll be no smile; 'twill be a dreary rigmarole in which the author tries to analyze the human soul, and show that life is lies; it will be full of moral wrecks, and it will take a swipe at worn out themes like sin and sex and all that sort of tripe. I hate to read such thoughtful books, they make my spirit quail; I'd rather read about the crooks pursued by sleuths to jail. For in these novels so profound, 'tis virtue meets with wreck, and all the goodly [illegible] around get cleavers in the neck. I'm too old-fashioned to [illegible] that modern sort of stuff; I like to see the knaves perspire, and [illegible] with justice rough. I like to see the worthy gent win out before the end, while sinners get the punish[illegible] that should their morals mend. I read the heavy, thoughtful [illegible] that wade in mortal grief, then turn to tales of sleuths and crooks [illegible] symptoms of relief."

Dr. Charles L. Reese, retired chemical director of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc., Wilmington, becomes president of the society January 1, and will serve through 1934, succeeding Prof. Authur B. Lamb, of Harvard University. Dr. Reese has served as president-elect during 1933.

Prof. E. Emmett Reid, of Johns Hopkins University, was elected director of the fourth district for 1934, and Prof Edward Bartow, head of the department of chemistry, State University of Iowa, director of the sixth district. Dr. Gustavus J. Esselen, president of Gustavus J. Esselen, Inc., Boston, was chosen a director at large.

Councilors at large were named as follows: William Lloyd Evans, chairman of the department of chemistry, Ohio State University; Dr. Francis C. Frary, director of research, Aluminum Co., of America; Dr. C. M. A. Stine, vice president, director, and member of the executive committee of the du Pont company; E. H. Volwiler, vice president in charge of research, Abbott Laboratories, North Chicago.

During the World War Prof. Adams was a major in the Chemical Warfare Service. In 1927 he was awarded the William H. Nichols medal of the New York section of the American Chemical Society for achievement in research. He has been chairman of the chemical section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and has served as associate editor of the Journal of the American Chemical Society.

Ohio Knitting Mill Complaint Planned

NRA and Labor Board to Hear Workers.

Cleveland, Dec. 17 (AP).—Claiming that Cleveland manufacturers of knitted wear have refused to meet employes for collective bargaining, Carl Cummings, representative of the United Textile Workers of America, was preparing to take the issue before the National Labor Board at Washington.

Cummings departed for New York Saturday, summoned by Thomas F. McMahon, international president of the union, who has made appointments with Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, NRA administrator, and Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the board.

Fliers Will Make Soil Erosion Maps

Ickes to Use Planes for Economy in Survey.

War aerial photography will be utilized by the Soil Erosion Service of the Interior Department for creation of mosaic maps on six land-saving projects.

Secretary Ickes yesterday announced awarding of contracts to map, from the air, areas of Illinois, South Carolina, Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri-Iowa and Kansas. The method will be identical with that used during the World War to map battle sectors.

The aerial mapping, Secretary Ickes said, has proved more economical than ground surveys, and reveal exact conditions.

Aid for Russians Asked in Vienna

Thousands Already Have Starved, Meeting Told.

Vienna, Dec. 17 (AP).—A two-day international conference, under leadership of Cardinal Archbishop Theodore Innitzer, for the relief of persons reported starving in South Russia, closed today.

A resolution was adopted urging nations with surplus wheat or other foodstuffs to ship it to the famine centers in Ukraine and North Caucasus to save "millions of lives."

The resolution said thousands already had perished of hunger during the past year.

After an address by Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, secretary of the Valley Forge Park Commission, the wreath was placed at a tree transplanted from Mount Vernon.

Radio Waves and Ripples

THE woman who made N. B. C.'s Cuckoo program what it is—whatever it is—Mrs. George T. Pennyfeather (Thomasson's the right name) is the mainstay of a renovised Monday Revue WRC airs tonight.

"Renovise" gives a no more adequate picture of what has happened to this program than "cleaning" fairly present what occurs in the place we call home every spring and fall. The show has been rebuilt. Edward Jendricks replaces Tenor Bert Bagranoff. A ten-piece Pete Macias band has the job once held by the Barney Breeskin unit. Don Lowe works in his first major commercial as master of ceremonies.

Mrs. Pennyfeather's assignment to a strictly local show should not be taken to mean that she has been traded out of the big league. She came to Washington to be near a husband ill in Walter Reed Hospital. The minds saw a chance to sell a program. Mrs. Pennyfeather saw an unexpected opportunity to defray hotel bill and incidentals.

This is written especially for a 9-year-old girl found sobbing in a corner of the studio following the Red Cross program at WJSV the other night.

They made her cut her broadcast just as she was about to read a favorite poem. That was because the time allotment had been shortened at the last minute. She thought she had made some terrible mistake and those sobs meant she had taken it to heart.

Her name is Evelyn Loomis. She attends Wheatley School. And if anyone asks you, tell her the people at the radio station think she did one swell job.

In 16 years of bell hopping in Washington hotels, Burton Caynor has met most of the world's important people.

He will tell about some of them—the Prince of Wales, Marshal Joffre, Lloyd George and, of course, Al Smith—in a WRC interview this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Playing with the Marine Band during its Tuesday broadcast on WMAL will be Mrs. Helen Corbin Heinl, pianist of some renown.

Presenting, with misgivings, Kenny Sagent (left) and "Pee Wee" Hunt, of the Casa Loma Caravan. Kenny doubles with saxophone and voice and Pee Wee handles a trombone Tuesday and Thursday nights on C. B. S. The girl in the inset is Alice Faye, sometimes heard with Rudy Vallee on N. B. C.

With WRC ready to install lines and equipment in Naval Hospital, the Secretary Ickes "Planned Recovery" broadcast was cancelled. The Secretary's doctor wouldn't permit it.

Though it may not seem possible, N. B. C. can produce figures to prove that two-thirds of its broadcast time in 1933 was taken by music, one-third by speeches.

That noisy interruption during the New York Philharmonic's Children's Concert Saturday was Columbia trying to communicate with the Lindberghs landing in Miami. C. B. S. was able to make out only an unintelligible portion of the Lindbergh reply.

Columbia Union, of the W. C. T. U., passed a resolution the other day commending WJSV for banning liquor advertising, Mrs. Jennie Esmond Wright wrote Harry Butcher.

The C. B. S. minds were gnashing their teeth over the way N. B. C. apparently had taken Nino Martini, Metropolitan tenor, irrevocably from them after they had gone to the trouble of bringing him to this country, building him a reputation. N. B. C. signed the Metropolitan, including Martini, for Saturday afternoon broadcasting. National at first refused to allow the Italian to continue his microphone appearances with C. B. S.'s Seven Star Revue Sunday nights, but later changed its mind.

WOL starts four new programs this week. One is Ted Doolittle, "The Village Nutsmith" you've heard about, starting tonight at 6:45. Another is "Real Life at the Cross Roads," a script act dealing in "good horse-sense philosophy" Wednesday and Saturday evenings. Lawrence Irving in a violin rendition of the classics is a third, Friday mornings at 11, and Howard Pyles and the Hotel Lafayette orchestra are scheduled for a half-hour of dance tunes Saturday afternoon at 3.

When Big Ben struck the midnight hour from London across the Atlantic one Christmas Eve several years ago, there was begun among the broadcasters a rivalry in impressive Christmas programs that sooner or later must exhaust the originality of even the best radio minds. We give them five years to get back to Big Ben.

N. B. C. this year probably feels it has put one over on C. B. S. by fixing to broadcast the great carillon in the royal palace of The Hague Christmas morning. For 15 minutes it is planned to bring across the Atlantic old Dutch carols and Christmas hymns as tapped out by these famous bells.

Dry Law Laid To Americans' Ego Complex

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—The recently repealed prohibition law was spawned by "National self-righteousness," Miss Jane Addams, 73-year-old sociologist, told the Sunday Evening Club tonight.

The same attitude was responsible for American tariff walls, neglect of the welfare of immigrants and policies on war debts and disarmament, Miss Addams said as she traced it back to religious sects which settled the Atlantic Coast "and were naturally convinced they bore witness of the highest truth and were therefore the chosen people."

"Historic manifestation of the spirit of superiority so easily turned into self-earning population," she said. * * * As our cities developed, overcrowded tenements, sweating systems, a high infant death rate and many another familiar aspect of unregulated industry became associated in the public mind with the immigrant."

This attitude led to formulation and passing of the prohibition law, she said.

"Because the Simon-pure American did make an exception of himself—what was good for the immigrant was not necessarily good for him—he exempted himself from laws which he would like to see enforced upon others. Many a Southern man voted for the eighteenth amendment because he wanted to keep drink away from the Negro, and the Northern man voted for it because he needed sober immigrant labor. As for themselves, they had no intention of obeying it.

"National self-righteousness is responsible for the widespread belief that differing opinions can be controlled by force."

"Our indifference to the killing of foreign gangsters has resulted in a preferential treatment of crime. Although we all know that the men who are bootlegging, racketeering, conducting gambling houses or systematically stealing automobiles could not continue unless they had been able to secure political protection. The community was slow to act so long as the Sicilians who composed the first powerful gangs killed only each other, it was considered of little consequence."

Pope Calls Church Herald of Science

Pontiff Speaks at Rites in New Hall.

Vatican City, Dec. 17 (AP).—The church "not only never has feared scientific truth but has always been its herald," Pope Pius said today in the inaugural ceremony of the new Pontifical Hall of Science.

During the exercises the Pontifical Academy of Science awarded Prof. George Birkoff, of Harvard University, the first prize of 10,000 lire (approximately $800) in a mathematical competition for a paper dealing with a system for solution of differential equations.

The Pontiff drew an allegorical picture of the three Wise Men of the East, paying homage to Christ in support of his contention that the church and science have always been harmonious.

Defeated Candidate Gets Tenement Office

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Mayor-elect Fiorello H. La Guardia announced the appointment today of Langdon W. Post to be tenement house commissioner when the new administration takes office on January 1.

Post was a fusion candidate for Borough President of Manhattan, and was defeated for the job by the incumbent, Samuel Levy. He served in the Assembly from 1928 through [illegible]
